SAVAGE, Richard Henry, author, soldier, diplomat, traveller, &c., was born in 1846 at Utica, New York, and educated at the United States Military Academy, West Point. He is descended from the Savages of Worcester and the Ewatts of Stirling. His boyhood was spent in California from 1851 to 1864 among the wild scenes of western American life. Promoted as an honour graduate to be an officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, he served upon the western frontier until 1871. Transferred to the diplomatic service, he filled various high positions in Europe and America under General Grant's administration. Selected by General Sherman, he served as Major and Chief of Staff to Sulei Pasha in Egypt. For some years he was identified with railroad construction and practical engineering, but since 1884 has devoted himself to travel and literature. He served with distinction in quelling the Kearny riots in San Francisco as Colonel of the National Guard, and afterwards qualified himself for the Bar, being admitted to practise in the Supreme Court of the United States. He is a member of many scientific and literary societies, and has travelled the whole world over, making special explorations in Siberia, Corea, Central America, Africa, and Russia. He is well known as a public speaker and lecturer upon graver matters, but has latterly gained distinction as a poet and writer of romantic fiction. In 1890 Colonel Savage selected New York City as a residence, and definitely devoted himself to literary pursuits. In eight years he has produced twenty-four volumes, novels, poems, and stories. His first novel, "My Official Wife," scored a wonderful success, and has been translated into seventeen languages, as well as extensively dramatised. "Prince Schamyl's Wooing," "In the Old Château," and "Delilah of Harlem" have been also notable hits. The works of this writer are published in the United States, England, and Germany, and have been translated into nearly all the Continental languages. Colonel Savage enjoys an enormous cosmopolitan acquaintance, the result of twenty-five years of travel and a life of the most stirring adventure. He spends a large portion of his time in Russia, his only daughter being married to a Russian noble of high rank.

SAVAGE-ARMSTRONG, George Francis, M.A., D.Lit., poet, born in the county of Dublin, May 5, 1845, is the third and only surviving son of the late E. J. Armstrong, Esq., and Jane, daughter and eventual co-heiress of the late Rev. Henry Savage, of Glasstry, J.P., Incumbent of Ardkeen, co. Down, and representative of the Glasstry branch of the ancient Anglo-Norman family of Savage of the Ards. He received his early education partly in Dublin and partly in Jersey. In 1862 he made a long pedestrian tour in France with his elder brother, George Armstrong. In the same year he received a civil appointment in the Customs, and culated in Dublin University. His career was most brilliant. He published a volume of "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic." In 1870 appeared "A Tragedy," written for the stage during his residence in France. He was appointed by the Government to the History and English Literature College, Cork, and a Fellow of the Queen's University in Ireland. The next year he was presented with the degree of M.A. by the Trinity College, Dublin, in recognition of his "high literary character." In 1872 he published "King Solomon's First part of the 'Tragedy' and new editions of "Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic," and "The Tragedy" were followed by "King Solomon's second part of the 'Tragedy' and in 1876 by "King Solomon's completed the Trilogy. In 1877 he published the "Life and Letters of his late brother Edmund, with a volume of his "Essays and enlarged edition of his "Poetical Works" (1st edit., 1877). In 1878 he was presented with the Doctor of Literature, honoris causa, by the Queen's University, and was elected Fellow of the Royal University, and in the spring of the same year published a volume of poems, the title of "A Garland from Greece," suggested by travels in Greece the year or two before. In 1880 he published a new volume of poems, entitled "Wicklow"; in 1887, "Victoria et Imperatrix: a Jubilee-song for Ireland"; and in 1888, "Mephistopheles: a Satire in Verse." In 1889 he published "One in the Land," a philosophical poem in three parts, new and enlarged edition of "Lyrical and Dramatic," and in the same year he was entrusted by the Trinity College, Dublin, with the able duty of writing the Ode for the centenary Festival of Dublin, which was set to music by the Professor Sir Robert Stewart, and performed with great clat on the night of the Festival. In the occasion of her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, Mr. Savage-Armstrong produced an ode in celebration of the event, "Queen-Empress and Empire," for which he was honoured by the expression of her Majesty's thanks. Savage-Armstrong has delivered public lectures on literary subjects to crowded audiences. He is a ional Literary Society of President of the Dublin Amateur Dramatic Club (of which Irving is President), and a member of various other societies.

In Ireland he is known as "The Wicklow." In 1879 Mr. Savory married Marie Elizabeth, daughter of the late Rev. A. J. Savage, Vicar of Malone, co. Wick. Consequently, he assumed the name of Savage, prefixed to his name as representative of his grandfather, Rev. Henry Savage, of Beech Hurst, Bray.

Mr. Joseph, Bart., M.P., born on July 23, 1843, and a member of the House of Commons. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford. SAXE-COBURG and GOTHA, Duke of, H.R.H. Prince Alfred Alexander William Ernest Albert, first Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., G.C.V.O., the second son of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness the late Prince Albert, was born at Windsor Castle, Aug. 6, 1844. His early education was entrusted to the Rev. H. M. Birch; from 1852 to F. W. Gibbs, Esq., C.B.; and in 1856 the Prince was placed under the special care of Major Cowell, R.E., and spent the winter of 1856-57 at Geneva, studying modern languages. Having decided upon joining the naval service, Prince Alfred was placed under the Rev. W. R. Jolly, at Alverbank, near Gosport, where he pursued the preparatory studies for his profession during the summer of 1858. He entered the service, after a strict and searching examination, Aug. 31, 1858, was appointed a Naval Cadet, and joined her Majesty's screw steam-frigate Euryalus, fifty-one guns, Captain John Walter Tarleton, C.B. After a leave of absence for a few weeks, Prince Alfred joined his ship for active sea-service, Oct. 27, 1858, and served in the St. George on various foreign stations, visited many of the countries on the shores of the Mediterranean, and extended his travels to America and the West Indies. In Dec.

1862 Prince Alfred declined the offer made to him of the dukedom of Saxe-Coburg. In Feb. 1863 Parliament granted him £15,000 a year, payable from the day on which he attained his majority, with an additional £10,000 for his carriage. He was created Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, and Earl of Strathearn in the peerage of the United Kingdom, Mar. 24, 1864, and took his seat in the House of Lords, June 5. His Royal Highness was sworn in Master of the Ordnance, March 21, 1866, and received the commission of the Staff of Lord-in-Chief of the Army in 1867. The Duke was appointed to the command of the fleet of the Channel, which sailed from Plymouth on Feb. 24. Since then he has visited nearly every country in the world, proceeding first to Australia, where he met with an enthusiastic reception on the part of the immigrants, and great indignation was caused by the mistaken attempt of an Irishman, named Patrick, to assassinate the Duke at a public levee at start, near Port Jackson, New South Wales, in March 1868. The Prince, however, was not hurt, and escaped in the face of a pistol-shot. Patrick was tried in March 1869, and sentenced to death in April 11. His Royal Highness subsequently visited Japan, where he was received both publicly and privately by the Mikado, China, and India. In 1870 he went to Italy, and in April 2, 1871, in audience with the Pope in Rome. In Jan. 20, 1874, his marriage with the Grand-Duchess Marie Alexandra, only daughter of Alexander III. Emperor of Russia, was celebrated with great pomp at St. Petersburg, and in March 12 the Duke and Duchess, accompanied by her Majesty the Queen, made a public entry into London amid much popular enthusiasm. He and the Duchess celebrated their silver wedding at Coburg in Jan. 23, 1899. His Royal Highness is Duke of Saxony and Prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. In Nov. 1892 he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral in her Majesty's fleet, and since that time he has held various important commands. In 1893 his Royal Highness, in command of the Mediterranean Squadron, visited some of the chief continental capitals, and on the occasion of his visit to Madrid he was invested with the Order of the Golden Fleece by the Queen-Regent of Spain. He gave up his command in 1899. On the death of H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, on Aug. 22, 1893, the Duke of Edinburgh succeeded him in the Duchy, and took the oath of loyalty to the constitution in the German Emperor's presence, afterwards paying him a state visit at Potsdam. He had previously, June 1889, been promoted to the rank (honorary) of an Infantry

General in the German Army. He spent a year in England in 1894, and in 1895 he remained at Coburg. He retains the rank of a Field-Marshal in 1873, and in 1896 he received the honorary rank of a General in 1896. He is a member of the Order of the Garter, and has been created K.C.H. in 1896.

SAKE-COBURG AND GOTHA
Duchess of Her Royal Highness Marie Alexandra of Russia, only daughter of the Emperor of Russia, and the Empress, was born at St. Petersburg, 17. 1874, and was married by proxy to the Duke of Edinburgh, in 1874. The Duchess gave birth to a son, who, on the 10th month, was baptised Alfred Alexander William. The sponsors being the Emperor of Russia, the King of Germany, the Prince of the Princess of Germany, and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. On Feb. 4, 1875, the Duke's other children were Marie Alexandra Victoria, 1875, the Princess Victoria, at Malta, Nov. 25, 1875, Alexandra Louise, at Coburg, Sept. 1, 1876, and Beatrice Leopoldine, at Coburg, 20, 1884. Her eldest daughter, Princess Marie, was married to the Prince of Roumania, and her second daughter, Princess Elizabeth, and her third daughter, Princess Victoria Maria, at Coburg to the Grand-Duke of Mecklenburg, April 1894, and has since a third daughter, Alexandra, in 1896 to Ernest, Hereditary Prince of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, and Prince Godefroi.

1835, displayed while very young an aptitude for the stage, and at the age of fifteen played with applause in "Michel et Christine" at the Athénée of her native city. An old teacher named Schaffner gave her lessons in singing, and she subsequently spent three years at Agen, playing secondary parts. Going to Paris, she obtained an engagement in the company of the Bouffes-Parisiens, and on Sept. 19, 1853, made her début in "Le Chien de Garde" at the Théâtre des Variétés. Here she met with considerable success, which was increased by her performances at the Théâtre du Palais Royal, where she made her first appearance, Aug. 5, 1858. In Dec.
1864 Mdle. Schneider returned to the Variétés, and elicited great applause by her acting in "La Belle Hélène." She achieved a success even more signal in "La Grande-Duchesse de Gérolstein" during the Universal Exposition of 1867, and appeared in the same part in London in July 1868. In the following year she returned to the Bouffes-Parisiens. On her marriage, in 1881, she retired from the stage.

Taylor, Esq., of Ravenswood, Croydon. He was educated by private tutors in Devonshire, &c., and at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, passing the Senior Cambridge Local Examination. He entered the London Hospital in 1879, whence he passed out in 1883 First Prizeman in Medicine and Obstetrics, and second in Surgery. While there he held the post of House Physician to Dr. Langdon Down. He took the diplomas of both Colleges, M.R.C.S. Eng. and L.R.C.P. Lond., and in 1884 passed the examination for M.D. in all subjects in honours at the University of Brussels. The same year he commenced general practice, but soon turned his attention to the treatment of nervous diseases, in which he has now for some years been almost exclusively engaged. Struck with the unconscious mental origin of most of these diseases, he studied psychology, and became a member of the Philosophic Institute. He is the author of a book on "The Unconscious Mind," dealing in extenso with the unconscious psychic forces within, and of works on "The Formation of Habit in Man," "Some Relations of Mind and Body," "The Natural and the Artificial," "Nerves in Order and Disorder," "Faith Healing," and "The Fourth Dimension," as well as of various papers in the Lancet, &c. He helped to found the Friedenheim Hospital for the Dying, of which he is a Trustee and Hon. Physician. He holds the latter post also in the Homes for Working-Girls, the Factory Girls' Union, the Morley Homes for Working-Men, the Church Army, &c. Dr. Schofield is also Member of the British Medical Association and Sanitary Institute, Member of Council Central Hospital Committee, Lebanon Hospital for Insane, District Nurses' Association, Royal British Nurses' Association, Chairman Parents' National Educational Union, Member of Council and Examiner to the National Health Society and the British College of Physical Education, Consulting Physician to Bishopstoke Asylum, Bedford. Soon after commencing practice Dr. Schofield's attention was drawn to the deplorable general ignorance of personal and domestic hygiene, and for many years most of his leisure time has been absorbed by seeking to make this an integral part of the education of every woman. In this cause he enlisted the sympathy and active co-operation of hygienic reformers, and eventually succeeded in 1895 in getting hygiene added to the subjects for the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examination. He has continued actively working in the cause, and has written and spoken much on the subject. Among his works are two manuals of physiology, "Personal and Domestic Hygiene," "How to Keep Healthy," "Health at Home," as well as numerous articles in magazines and reviews. He is a religious worker, and has written religious books. Address: 40 Grosvenour Terrace, Hyde Park.

SCHOFIELD. General M'Allister, was born in Dutchess County, New York, Sept. 1, 1817; graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1838, and served in Florida as Lieutenant of Artillery. From 1855 to 1860 he was at West Point as Assistant Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy. From 1860 to 1861 was Professor at Washington University, St. Louis, after the outbreak of the Civil War he was appointed Brigadier-General, and in November 1862 Major-General of Volunteers, commanding the 1st Division, Kansas, with head-quarters at Fort Leavenworth. In February 1864 he took command of the Army of the Ohio, and joined the combined armies under General Sherman, taking a prominent part in all their operations to the close of the war. He was Brigadier-General in the regular army in 1864 and Major-General in 1865. He was placed in command of the Military District, consisting of the States of Virginia. In 1868 he was Secretary of War, but resigned, and was given the command of the Department of the Missouri, and the Division of the Pacific. From 1881 he was Superintendent of the Academy at West Point. In 1882 he was again given the command of the Division of the Pacific; from which in 1883 he was transferred to the command of the Division of the Missouri, with head-quarters at Chicago; and in 1886 to the command of the Division of the Atlantic, with head-quarters at Governor's Island, New York City. At the death of General Sheridan, in 1888, he was in command of the Army of the Potomac, with head-quarters at Washington. He retired because of the age limit in 1895. In February preceding his retirement he had received promotion to Lieut.-General of the army. He has published "Forty-six Years in the Army."

SCHREINER, Olive (Mrs. Wright), a South African author, the second daughter of a Lutheran minister in Cape Town, and was born in the early sixties. At the age of twenty she came to England with the marriage of her father. Her best-known work, "The Story of an African Farm." She was anxious to devote herself to physiological science, and the publication of her book, after it had been submitted to Mr. George Y.

t great promise, led her to literature. "The Story of a Farm," by "Ralph Iron," won immense popularity, and in 1893 brought many editions. A story by Olive Schreiner is entitled "The Story of an African Farm," 1893, a collection of parables. In May 1893 she visited England, and in October published a little African story, "The Story of a Real Life," in the Library. Her most notable work of recent years has been a serial tale "Trooper Peter termatloo," 1897. Her latest work (1899) is "An English South African of the Situation," being a study of the Transvaal imbroglio from a point of view. In February 1899 Schreiner married a young man, John W. Wright. She is the sister of P. Schreiner, Q.C., C.M.G.

MR. The Hon. William Schreiner, C.M.G., Cape Premier, is a German missionary to South Africa. His English lady, Miss Tindell, was in a convent at Grahamsburg, where he was born in 1859. He was educated at the Cape University, where everything before him. He studied in England, entered Downing College, Cambridge, and was Senior in his class in 1881, obtaining the gold medal. He gained an honorary studentship, and was called to the Inner Temple in 1882. He returned to the Cape, and soon began to practice before the Supreme Court and was appointed Counsel to the Government of South Africa. When Rhodes became Prime Minister of the Cape, Schreiner was appointed Attorney-General, and on President Krüger's refusal to allow drifts to all colonial traffic he advised the Government that they should oppose the terms of the Convention. This opinion being opposed by the Imperial Government, it brought to bear on the Transvaal, which resulted in war. In 1897, when he was a witness before the South Africa Committee of the House of Commons, his evidence was so good that it would have been a better one for the difficulty, although he still held that the London Convention was invalid. Mr. Schreiner was a witness before the South Africa Committee and his description of his interview with Mr. Cecil Rhodes on the news of the Jameson Raid was so good that it formed one of the sensational incidents of the inquiry. Mr. Justice Bigham, as a member of the Committee, had taken a view strongly in favour of the Uitlanders, and he subjected Mr. Schreiner to a very searching interrogatory. The struggle was an intellectual one, and has been regarded as one of the most notable displays of mental power ever witnessed in a parliamentary committee room. The Government of Sir Gordon Sprigg (q.v.) was defeated in July 1898, on a motion of want of confidence moved by Mr. Schreiner, by a majority of 41 against 36. Thereupon, the Government appealed to the country, and the General Election of September 1898 left them in a minority of one, which the election of the Speaker, Dr. Berry (q.v.), increased to two. Mr. Schreiner then brought forward another vote of want of confidence, by which the Government were defeated by 39 to 37. He accordingly was called upon to form a Ministry, and, although he professes steadfast loyalty to the Imperial crown, it is felt that Mr. Hofmeyr of the Africander Bond really directs the policy of the new combination. Holding office with such a small majority, he had to consent in the early days of his administration to a conference with the opposition led by Mr. Rhodes, on the subject of a Redistribution Bill, which, if carried, will be the knell of his party. Mr. Schreiner is the brother of Miss Olive Schreiner ("Ralph Iron"). He is married to a daughter of Mr. Retz, for many years the President of the Orange Free State. Address: Sweet Repose, Cape Town.

SCHUNCK, (Henry) Edward, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Manchester on Aug. 16, 1820, and is the youngest son of the late Martin Schunck, foreign merchant. On the completion of his school education, he was sent to Germany to study chemistry, as it was intended that he should take the direction of his father's large print and calico works in Manchester. At Berlin, under Rose and Magnus, he made first-rate progress, and under Liebig, at Giessen, he took the degree of Ph.D. On returning to England, Dr. Schunck engaged for some years in practical work, but finding this repugnant to his tastes and inclination, he gave it up, and devoted himself to pure science. It is in consequence, however, of his early connection with print and dye work, that his attention was directed more especially to the chemistry of colouring matters, a knowledge of which is most essential to the proper understanding of dyeing processes. The research which Dr. Schunck conducted in Germany was "On the Action of Nitric Acid on Aloes." The chief result

AND CUIQUEM. Among all the colouring matters there are none the study of whose properties and reactions is calculated to throw more light on the whole class than those which are prepared by an artificial process from certain kinds of lichens. Dr. Schunck, in common with many other philosophers, was surprised that lichens, a class of plants themselves colourless, should yield colouring matters by the combined action of ammonia and oxygen. Another paper on this subject appeared in 1846 being a special research "On the Substances contained in the Rocella tinctoria," which derives its interest from the fact of its being that species of lichen from which the finest kind of archil dye is prepared. From 1846 to 1853 Dr. Schunck was at work on the subject of the colouring matters of madder, then one of the most important dye-stuffs used in calico-printing, but which has since been replaced by artificial alizarin. Dr. Schunck investigated the properties of "rubian" at great length, and read several memoirs on the subject to the Royal Society. In 1854 Dr. Schunck produced, among other papers, one "On the Action of the Ferment of Madder on Sugar" being one of a of Chemical Industry, and at general meeting of the Society in 1897 delivered an address which was published in extenso in al. In March 1898 he received Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society the Society's Dalton Medal for his researches, particularly colouring matters. In 1851 he married Edith, daughter of John Brooke, Esq. Address: Kersal, Manchester.

LN, Jacob Gould, American, was born at Freetown, P.E.I., 1854. In 1870 he won a Scholarship of Wales College, Charlotte; in 1875 he won the Canadian Scholarship in connection with University of London, and two years resided there with the University of London Philosophy. In 1877-78 he resided in Paris and Edinburgh, and in 1878 he won the Hibbert Travellership, spending the ensuing two years as Hibbert Fellow at Heidelberg, Göttingen, as well as in Italy. In 1879 he was a Professor at Acadia College, Nova Scotia, and in 1882-86 was Professor of Classics and English Literature in Acadia College, Halifax. From that time he was head of the Philosophical Department at Cornell University, Ithaca, and in 1892 became President of the Association for the Advancement of Science, a position which he still (1898) occupies. He was elected a Fellow of the Association in 1895. He has published "Ethics," 1881; "Ethical Idealism," 1887; "Belief in God," 1887; "Agnosticism and Religion," 1887.

Z, Carl, was born at Liblar, Prussia, Germany, March 2, 1829. Educated at the Gymnasium of Bonn and at the University of Bonn. He became associated with Gottschalk, in editing a revolutionary and subsequently he participated in the revolutionary movement in South America. At the surrender of the fortress of Montevideo, he escaped into Switzerland, and in May 1850 he returned secretly to Germany and rescued Kinkel, who had been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment in the fortress of Spandau. The two were then expelled from Scotland. Schurz then resided in London as a newspaper correspondent, and a year later returned to London. In 1852 he went to the United States, remained in Philadelphia for some years, and then settled in Wisconsin, where he became prominent as a political writer. The following year he was nominated by the Republicans for Lieutenant-Governor of the State, but was defeated. In 1861 he was appointed Minister to Spain, where he remained till December 1861. Returning to the United States, he resigned his office, and entered the army, and in the May following was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He took part in the second battle of Bull Run, was promoted to the rank of Major-General, and commanded a division in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. In the autumn of 1863 he went to Tennessee, and took part in several battles, but resigned after the close of the war in 1865. In the summer of 1865 he was sent by President Johnson on a confidential mission into the Southern States, and his elaborate report on their condition was published by Congress. In 1866 he removed to Detroit, Michigan, where he founded and edited for some time the Detroit Post. In 1868 he removed to St. Louis, and in 1869 was elected U.S. Senator from Missouri. He opposed President Grant's San Domingo policy, and in several speeches advocated the return to specie payments. In the Presidential canvass of 1872 he united with that portion of the Republican party known as Liberals, who nominated Mr. Greeley for President, in opposition to General Grant; but on the defeat of Mr. Greeley he, with most of the Liberals, returned to the regular Republican party; and in 1876 took an active part in the canvass for Mr. Hayes, by whom he was in 1877 appointed Secretary of the Interior. During his occupancy of that position he seconded Mr. Hayes's efforts at a reform of the civil service by instituting competitive examinations for appointments to clerkships in his department. At the expiration of his term, 1881, he removed to New York, and was the editor of the Evening Post until August 1883. Since then he has been engaged in literary pursuits. In 1884 he took a leading part in the Independent movement in the Presidential campaign, opposing the election of James G. Blaine and advocating that of Grover Cleveland. He published a "Life of Henry Clay," in 2 vols., in 1887, and a biographical sketch of Abraham Lincoln in 1891. In 1888 he visited Germany, and was received with distinction by Prince Bismarck, the present Emperor (then Crown Prince), and many of the prominent public men of the Empire. In the same year he wrote a public letter in favour of the re-election of President Cleveland. In 1893 he was elected President of the National Civil Service Reform League, succeeding George William Curtis, deceased.

SCHUSTER, Professor Arthur, Ph.D., F.R.S., son of Francis Joseph

Prof. Schwann was born in Bremen, Germany, on Sept. 13, 1810, and educated in the sciences at the University of Bonn. He spent a considerable part of his life in the laboratory of the late Hermann von Helmholtz. He received his degree of Ph.D. from the University of Bonn in 1834, and was appointed to the post of Honorary Demonstrator in the Physiological Laboratory of the Owens College. After having spent a few months in Helmholtz's Laboratory in Leipzig, he was appointed early in the year 1837 to the post of Lecturer in Natural Science of the Owens College, and was then appointed to leave England for Bonn. In 1841, a Professorship of Applied Mathematics was founded at the Owens College, and he was appointed to the chair, which he held till 1858, when he succeeded Robert Stewart as Professor of Physics. He took part in four different expeditions in observations of total solar eclipses—the Spanish eclipse which has already been mentioned; the eclipse in Colorado, which took place in 1874; the 1882 eclipse in Egypt, in which he photographed for the first time on plates prepared by Captain Abney, the spectrum of the solar corona; and finally the eclipse of 1889 in the West Indies. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1874. In 1882 he was President of Section A of the British Association, which met at Edinburgh during that year. He was appointed by the Council of the Royal Society to give the Bakerian Lecture in 1884 and 1890, on the discharge of electricity through gases. He is the author of several papers published in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Reports of the British Association; amongst others a paper, published by the Royal Society in 1884, in which the experimental proof was first given that the apparent repulsion observed in Crookes's radiometer is due to the residual gas left in the vacuum. The Philosophical Transactions of the year 1889 contain a full discussion of the diurnal variation of terrestrial magnetism, in which it is proved that the cause of variation is to be found in the earth's atmosphere. A number of his papers "On the present state of Spectrum Analysis," are published in the Reports of the British Association. During the last few years Prof. Schuster's time has principally been given up to the investigation of the distribution of the solar spectrum, and the annual meeting of the British Association in 1890, he reported on the progress of his researches in this direction. He is also a member of the Royal Society, and has been elected a Foreign Honorary Member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is also a member of the Royal Society of London, and has been elected a Foreign Honorary Member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is also a member of the Royal Society of London, and has been elected a Foreign Honorary Member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

In 1859 the late Rev. .F.R.S., invited him to ls in the Woodwardian is work continued till

1871, with teaching of Field Geology and Palæontology and occasional lectures for the Professor. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Geography and Lecturer on Geology in King's College and Queen's College, London ; of Queen's College he became the Dean in 1881. He originated in 1885, and has since conducted, the London Geological Field class, having published in 1891 a handbook for its use. He became a member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1861, and subsequently Fellow of the Geological, Linnean, Zoological, and Royal Geographical Societies. He was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. His original writings, about 120 in number, relate to Palæontology and other departments of geology, and to Comparative Anatomy. He has published a "Catalogue of Fossil Reptiles in the Woodwardian Museum," 1869 ; the "Ornithosauria," 1870 ; "Physical Geology and Palæontology," 1885, issued as vol. i. of Phillips's Geology ; "The Freshwater Fishes of Europe," 1886 ; and "Factors in Life," 1887 ; "Fossil Reptilia," 1887 ; and "Story of the Earth in Past Ages," 1895. He has studied the Fossil Reptilia in the public museums of France, Belgium, Holland, North and South Germany, Austria, Russia, and Cape Colony, from which country he has collected several new types of reptiles. His scientific memoirs are contained in the publications of the Geological, Linnean, and Royal Societies, the Geological Magazine, and Annals of Natural History. Among the results of his researches was the discovery (1865) that the Fossil Reptiles named Pterodactyles, are more nearly related to birds than are living reptiles ; this was made out by evidence from the breathing organs and brain. He regarded (1865) the succession of geological deposits of different mineral character as evidence of changed geographical outlines of ancient lands ; and explained the changes in fossil life of successive deposits as results of migration of faunas consequent on geographical changes. He enunciated the mechanical law in 1866, that growth is in proportion to work done ; and regarded it as explaining the different proportions of organs and of animals. In 1869 he founded the genus Ornithopsis on a vertebra in the British Museum which had previously been regarded as part of the skull of Iguanodon, indicated it as a new ordinal group of reptiles, which have since been found in the Isle of Wight and the United States. He discovered that Ichthyosaurus was viviparous, 1880, and that some Plesiosaurs were viviparous, 1887. In a Croonian lecture of the Royal Society, 1887, the Fossil Reptilia of South Africa were found to be a link between the existing Amphibia and Mammalia. Professor H. G. Seeley received from the Geological Society the Murchison Fund, 1876, and the Lyell Medal, 1885. He was made a Foreign Correspondent of the Academy of Sciences of Philadelphia in 1878; Corresponding Member Kk. Geologische Reichsanstalt, Vienna, in 1879; and member of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow in 1889. Address: 25 Palace Gardens Terrace, Kensington, W.

SEFTON, Earl of, Charles William Hylton Molyneux, Bart., K.G., Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Tower and Sword, was born on June 25, 1867, and succeeded his father, the 4th Earl, in 1897. SELBORNE, Earl of, William Waldegrave Palmer, J.P., Under-Secretary for the Colonies, was born on Oct. 17, 1859, and is the son of the 1st Earl, the eminent Lord Chancellor Selborne, and Laura, daughter of the 8th Earl Waldegrave. He succeeded his father in 1895. He was educated at Winchester College, and University College, Oxford, where he obtained a first class in the Modern History School. He was Assistant Private Secretary to the Right Hon. H. C. E. Childers, Chancellor of the Exchequer, from 1882 to 1885. As Viscount Wolmer he was Member of Parliament for East Hampshire, first as a Liberal and afterwards as a Liberal Unionist from 1885 to 1892, when he was returned for West Edinburgh. He represented that constituency until 1895, when he entered the Upper House, and was appointed Under-Secretary for the Colonies. He is a Major in the Hants Militia, and co. Alderman. He married, in 1883, Lady Beatrix Maud Cecil, daughter of the Marquis of Salisbury. Addresses: 49 Mount Street, W.; and Blackmoor, Petersfield, Hants.

SELLA, Vittorio, was born at Biella, in N. Italy, in August 1859, and is distinguished as a mountaineer, geographer, and photographer. Between 1881 and 1890 he received many medals and diplomas for photography in London, Turin, Vienna, and Florence; and in the last year he received the Murchison award in recognition of his recent journey in the Caucasus, and his series of panoramic photographs of the chain. He has written many memoirs, the last being "Nel Caucaso Centrale: Excursioni colla camera oscura," and he is well known as having obtained the largest, and probably the best, views of the Alps made, in 1882, the first of the Matterhorn, and of the Rosa.

SELOUS, Frederick Explorer, naturalist, and sportsman, born in London on Feb. 18, 1857. His father was of Huguenot descent, and on his mother's side he is descended from the Bruces of Clackmannan. Educated at Bruce Castle and at Eton, he was famous for his high school days of violent mischief, and his precocity. His schoolfellows showed their appreciation of his character by changing his name of Selous into "Zulu," which became his nickname. When a few years of age he left Rugby for a couple of years in Switzerland, and many, where he learnt French from the former, as he thinks, with great facility. Whilst in the latter country he attracted some notice in the press by jumping into the Rhine to catch after a wild duck which he had seen had on a greatcoat and top hat, and filled with water, and then, as a swimmer he found great difficulty in getting to shore with the greatcoat still quite a youth he had decided to cast his lot in South Africa. In 1878 he sailed from England, and he first set foot upon the shores of Africa in 1881 he published his first book, "Hunter's Wanderings in Africa," which won instant recognition, but he received more credit from the general public for his prowess as a hunter than for what he had done as a naturalist and sportsman. From the Royal Geographical Society, however, he received successively Cuthbert Peake grant, the Buxton Medal, and finally, in 1893, the Forster Medal, the highest honour which their power to bestow. Such honours are not gained by hunting, and his services to Africa, to which he has so largely contributed, will show how Mr. Selous has won his. His services to natural history have received recognition from the Royal Society, who have made him a corresponding member. In 1885 Selous published his second and most known work, "Travel and Sport in South-East Africa." A matter of varied and often of great interest, it contains an account of a historic pioneer expedition which the author so successfully led. In his first Matabele campaign Mr. Selous was with great gallantry on the front of the colonists, and was wounded while protecting some waggon trains which were surprised by the enemy. On

SEMBRICH, Marcella, a distinguished vocalist, was born at Lemberg, Galicia, Feb. 15, 1858, and for some years studied the piano and violin, firstly under her father, and before she was six she appeared on the concert platform. While receiving piano lessons from Liszt in Vienna, it was discovered that she had a splendid voice, and she was at once sent to Milan to study singing under Lamperti.
She made her début as an opera singer in Athens in "I Puritani," 1877, and then returned to Vienna for further study; she subsequently appeared in Dresden, and remained at the Royal Opera House till 1880. She soon became a great favourite in the characters of "Zerlina," "Susanna," "Constance," "Martha," "Lucia," &c.
In 1880 she made her first appearance in London. Mdle. Sembrich has sung in all the principal cities of Europe, and has been everywhere received with the greatest enthusiasm. In 1883-84 she was a member of Mr. Abbey's Italian Opera Company at New York, where she created a great sensation by the compass of her voice and the brilliance of her execution.

SEMON, Sir Felix, M.D., F.R.C.P., was born at Danzig, in Eastern Prussia, on Dec. 8, 1849. His father was the late Mr.
S. J. Semon, stockbroker, of Danzig, later of Berlin; his mother the eldest daughter of the late Alderman S. Aschenheim, of Elbing. He received his education at one of the Berlin High Schools, between 1856 and 1868, and from 1868 to 1874 studied medicine at Heidelberg and Berlin. His studies were interrupted by the Franco-German war, through which he served as a volunteer in the 2nd Uhlans of the Guard (medal and five clasps). In 1873 he passed the examination for the M.D. of Berlin; in 1874 the German States examination. After the completion of his official course of studies he went to Vienna, Paris, and London, with a view of seeing practice abroad. Having been appointed Clinical Assistant at the Throat Hospital, Golden Square, in 1875, he pointed to the Sage Professorship of Moral Philosophy in Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. In 1897 he succeeded the late Professor Calderwood in the Chair of Moral Philosophy at Edinburgh University. He has been a frequent contributor to magazines on philosophical subjects, and he assisted the late Professor Calderwood in the revision and re-writing of Fleming's "Vocabulary of Philosophy." In 1881 he published an essay, entitled "Freedom of the Ethical Postulate," and in 1894 completed and published a larger work, entitled "A Study of Ethical Principles." While at Cornell University he acted as co-editor of the Philosophical Review. Address: Edinburgh University.

SEWELL, Elizabeth Missing, sister of the Rev. William Sewell, was born in the Isle of Wight in 1815. She became known as a writer of High Church fiction by her "Amy Herbert," 1844. William R., American, born in 1835 at Galesburg, received a common-school education. He entered the service as Lieutenant in the 1st of Michigan Volunteers, and distinguished himself in the campaigns in Virginia, receiving promotion to Major, and later Lieutenant-Colonel. He organised a regiment and fought them brilliantly in the war between the States. He was promoted Brigadier-General for gallantry in action, and when the Army was disbanded he re-entered the Regular Army as Lieutenant-Colonel of U.S. Infantry. He was promoted to Brigadier-General in 1879, and on the outbreak of the war with Spain he was made Major-General of Volunteers and put in command of the expedition which landed in Cuba in June 1898. He captured Santiago together with the northern end of the island and the Spanish forces, on July 17th of 1898, which greatly influenced Spain to accept the proposal for which the war ended on December 12, 1898.

Shand, The Right Hon.
James Shand, D.C.L. Hon.

Oxford, LL.D. Glasgow, D.L., was born Dec. 13, 1828, and is the son of Alexander Shand of Aberdeen, and Louisa, daughter of John Whyte, M.D., of Banff. He was educated at the Universities of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and Heidelberg, was called to the Bar, at Edinburgh, in 1853, and was Advocate-Depute from 1860 to 1862. He has been Sheriff of Kincardineshire, Haddingtonshire, and Berwickshire. In 1872 he was appointed a Judge of the Court of Session, and retired in 1890, when he was appointed a Member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In 1882 he was appointed a Commissioner under the Educational Endowments Act. In 1892 he was made Hon. Bencher of Gray's Inn, and raised to the Peerage as Baron Shand. He was Chairman of the Coal Owners' and Miners' Conciliation Board in 1894. He married Emily Merelina, daughter of John Clarke Meymott, in 1857. Addresses: 32 Bryanston Square, W., and Athenæum.

SHANNON, James Jebusa, A.R.A., is an Irish Canadian, and was born at Auburn, in New York State, in 1862. He came to England at the age of sixteen, and was for three years a student at South Kensington, where he gained the gold medal for the figure. He first became known as an admirable portrait-painter by his likeness of the Hon. Horatia Stopford, one of the Queen's maids of honour, exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1881, and painted for her Majesty. In 1887 appeared his full-length portrait of Henry Vique, Esq., a picture for which he has been awarded first-class medals at the Paris, Berlin, and Vienna Exhibitions. At the Chicago Exhibition he gained a medal for his full-length portrait of Mrs. Charlesworth. His noted Academy portraits and pictures during recent years have been—"The Marquis of Granby, M.P.," "Winifred, daughter of G. H. Pember, Esq.," and "The Lady Boston," 1895; "Mrs. Baird," 1896; "Clare Sewell Read, Esq., M.P. for Norfolk, 1865-85" (presentation portrait), "Mrs. George Peck," "Jill, the daughter of G. W. Rhodes," and "The Right Hon. Sir John T. Hibbert, K.C.B.," 1897; "The White Mouse," "Kathleen, daughter of Hon. Mr. Justice Mathew," "Mrs. Herbert Cohen," "Sir James Smith" (presentation portrait), and "Sir Thomas Roe" (presentation portrait), 1898; "Babes in the Wood," and portraits of Lady Mathew, the Lady Ulrica Duncombe, and Lord Cranworth, 1899. Mr. Shannon was for some years a Member of the New English Art Club, of which he was an original member. With Mr. E. A. Abbey and Mr. Sargent he shares the distinction of being one of the few Americans who, since the time of West, have won a high place in the annals of English art. In 1897 he was made A.R.A. Address: 3 Holland Park Road, Kensington, W.

SHARP, William, was born at Paisley on Sept. 12, 1856, and was educated at Glasgow University. He spent his boyhood in the West Highlands, and there probably acquired his appreciation of things Celtic. He has travelled in Australia, and among the South Sea Islands: also extensively in Europe, Canada, &c. In 1879 he came to London, and was introduced by Philip Bourke Marston to Rossetti, of whom he saw much, and whose biography he wrote. He is well known as a critic and magazine-writer, and as general editor of the "Canterbury Poets," in which series he published "Sonnets of this Century," which has gone into nearly twenty editions, and as editor of "Lyra Celtica," published in collaboration with Mrs. Sharp, a Highland relative of his, who is herself an author, and ardent student of literature. "Lyra Celtica" is an anthology of English poems, written by authors with Celtic blood in their veins. The above are only a few among the works published by Mr. and Mrs. William Sharp, which include many volumes of verse, novels, anthologies, monographs on Philip Bourke Marston, Brown, &c. Address: 30 Greencroft Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

SHARPE, Richard Bowdler, LL.D., was born Nov. 22, 1847, at 1 Skinner Street, Snow Hill, London, where his father was publisher and editor of Sharpe's London Magazine, a famous literary journal of the time. He was a King's Scholar at Peterborough and Loughborough Grammar Schools, of both of which successively his cousin, the Rev. James Wallace, was headmaster. At the age of eighteen he was appointed the first Librarian of the Zoological Society of London, a post which he held from November 1866 to February 1872. In September of the latter year he received the appointment of Senior Assistant in the Zoological Department of the British Museum, in charge of the collection of birds, which post he still holds. In 1875 he received the Honorary Fellowship of the Zoological Society, "for distinguished services to science." He is also an Honorary Member of the New Zealand Institute, a Foreign Member of the Academy of Sciences of Lisbon, of the Zoological Society of Amsterdam, of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow, and many other foreign societies. He is also LL.D. of the University of Aberdeen, and holds the Gold Medal for Science from H.L.M. The Empire bestowed upon him the Zoological Congress at London when he was President of the Zoology and Comparative Anatomy section. He delivered an address on "The Evolution of Birds." Dr. Bowdler Sharpe's principal works are: "A Monograph of the Alcedinidae, or Family of Kingfishers," "A Monograph of the Family of Swallows," and "Layard's 'Birds of Syria' and many popular books on ornithology. His greatest work, however, is the "History of Birds" in the British Museum, a graphic record of all the birds of the world. Of the twenty-three volumes of this work as yet published there are no less than eleven birds of the world also completed several of the volumes of the late John Gould, after the plan of the latter, such as "The Birds of New Guinea," "The Birds of New Guinea," "The Birds of New Guinea," &c. The donations of the great collector of birds, notably Allan Hume, C.B., Mr. F. L. Man, Mr. Osbert Salvin, Mr. Ramsay, and Mr. Henry See, under Dr. Sharpe's curatorship of the Zoological collections of the British Museum have increased the series of the "History of Birds" to an enormous extent, so that the series amounts to about 100 volumes—more than four times as many as possessed by any other museum in the world. Address: Natural History Museum, Cromwell Road, S.W.

SHAW, Byam, painter, born Madras on November 13, 1857, son of John Shaw of Artillery, Registrar of the High Court. He was educated at home, and at St. John's Wood Art School, and at the Royal Academy School. In November 1894 he was elected a member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours, and in January 1895 a Member of the Society of Artists. He is a brilliant colourist, and an interesting and talented disciplinarian. He exhibited notable pictures at the Royal Academy since 1893, among which may mention a scene illustrating Rossetti's "Blessed Damsel," a portrait, 1895: "Whitner," a portrait, 1896; "Love's Labour's Lost," "The Comforter," two very original, and notable paintings, "Truth," and "The Queen," 1898; and "Love the Comforter." There is a great future for Byam Shaw, who in time will be accepted successor to Sir E. Jones, Rossetti, Madox-Brown,

Flora L., who is at the head of the Editorial Department of the Times, went to South Africa and Australia. Her activity at the Jameson Raid brought her before the public. In Australia she investigated the question of the South Sea Islanders on the sugar plantations. More recently she has been in Canada, her series of articles in the Times on the Dominion of the Klondike interest in 1898. She was in the Klondike in that year, and her experiences in a lecture at the end of 1899. Her account of the diggings bore eloquent witness to her kindness, not to say chivalry, to the travellers, who were all men. In herself she was chiefly impressed by the honesty which reigns among the miners. Gold lies about openly in the hands of the diggers, who do not think of locking it up. She is a believer in the great auriferous possibilities of British Columbia, and her opinion that the Klondike will be exhausted for some fifty

SHAW, George Bernard, critic, was born in Dublin on July 26, 1856. His father, George Carr Shaw, was an ex Civil servant, who capitalised his pension and embarked on flour-milling, failing entirely in this new business. His mother was Lucinda Elizabeth Gurly, who had much talent as an amateur singer and teacher. The only education George Bernard received was at the Wesleyan Connexional School in Dublin, although his family were not Methodists, and this ended when he was fourteen. He came to London in 1876, but for several years could obtain no literary recognition. Meantime, he flung himself into Socialism, and was one of the founders of the Fabian Society. For four years, from 1886 to 1890, he was art critic to the World, and for one year (1891) to Truth. He gained his reputation as a musical critic by his articles in the Star, signed "Corno di Bassetto" (1888-91). He then for four years was musical critic of the World (1890-94), until the death of Edmund Yates. From 1895 to 1898 he was dramatic critic of the Saturday Review, under the editorship of Frank Harris, and wrote such pertinent accounts of new plays that he reminded old readers of the palmy days of the "Saturday Reviler." In 1892 his play, "Widowers' Houses," was produced by the Independent Theatre Society, creating as much discussion as did his "Arms and the Man" at the Avenue Theatre in 1894. Other plays of his which have been performed in 1897 are: "Candida," "The Man of Destiny," and "The Devil's Disciple." His literary output began with four novels: "The Irrational Knot," "Love among the Artists," "Cashel Byron's Profession," and "An Unsocial Socialist," which were published between 1880 and 1883. In 1889 he edited a volume of Fabian Essays, to which he contributed two himself; and he has written other Socialist pamphlets, such as: "The Impossibilities of Anarchism," and "The Fabian Society, what has it done?" He has written an analysis of the plays of Henrik Ibsen, whom he regards as the greatest living dramatist. In 1898 appeared his "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," in two volumes, which provoked as much discussion as Mr Shaw's works are accustomed to do; and in the same year he wrote a commentary on Wagner's "Der Ring der Nibelungen" for the use of spectators at the performances at Covent Garden in that year, entitled "Wagner's Ring, what it means." In this year he was nursed through a serious illness by Miss Payne Townshend, a wealthy supporter of Socialism, who had done much good work in connection with the Fabian Society and the London School of Economics. Mr Shaw married this

SHAW. LEFEVRE. Hon. George John, L.C. John George Shaw-Lefevre, Rachel Emily, daughter of Wright, of Mapperley Hall, was born on June 12, 1850. His education at Eton and legal, Cambridge. He was Barrister at the Inner Temple in 1875. He was first elected M.P. for the Liberal interest, and has been one of the representatives of the borough down to 1885, when

Murdoch. He was a Lord of the Treasury from May to July 1866; the Board of Trade from 1866 to January 1871; Secretary of the Admiralty from the last date to November 1874, and again from April 1874 to November 1875, when he resigned that office on becoming Governor of Madras. As Secretary of the Admiralty he introduced improvements into the service, notably at Westminster and at Hyde Park. On the death of Mr. Fawcett he was appointed Postmaster-General (1874), and his tenure of this office was marked by the introduction of reforms. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre was a Benchman of the Inner Temple in 1882. He is the author of an article on "Public Works in the Nineteenth Century" (November 1882), his defeat at Reading in 1885, he was without a seat in the election, April 1886, he stood for Bradford, vacant on the death of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. In 1893 appeared his important work on "Tenure of Land." At the general election of 1886 and 1892 he was elected as a Gladstonian Liberal. In 1892 he was appointed First Secretary of Works, in which office he was succeeded by Mr. Herbert Gladstone. He succeeded Mr. H. H. Matthews in 1895 as President of the Government Board. At the general election of 1895 he was defeated for Central Bradford. In a severe contest, he was re-elected for Haggerston Division of the London County Council. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre took part in establishing the Common Law Society in 1866, and has been a member of the Society, with intervals, ever since. At his death, a number of suits were instituted by Lords of Manors who claimed the commons round the suits were in all cases lost. These were the means of saving the commons. In 1895 he published "English Commons and their History," a history of the Commons. Other works which he has written are "Peel and O'Connell," a criticism of the Irish policies of the Government. His sister, Miss Madeffevre, was formerly Principal of the Hall, Oxford. In 1873 she married Constance Emily More of the Earl of Ducie. Ad-resses: 18 Bryanston Square, W.; Oldbury Place, Ightham, &c.; and Athenæum.

SHEA, Sir Ambrose, K.C.M.G., was born in Newfoundland in 1820, received his education there, and for over thirty years occupied a foremost place in the public affairs of that Colony. For six years he was Speaker of the Assembly, and subsequently for five years was an unofficial Member of the Council of Government. He was one of the two delegates from the Colony at the celebrated Quebec Conference at which the Constitution of the Canadian Dominion was framed. In 1888 Sir Ambrose was delegated to London to urge the right of the Colony to enforce restrictions on French fishing operations on the Newfoundland coasts, but owing to some Imperial Cabinet difficulties at the moment nothing could be done. The Legislature of the Island, however, renewed their efforts, and he was again sent, in conjunction with the Premier, Sir Robert Thorburn, to press the question, and this time with success. Soon afterwards Lord Knutsford offered Sir Ambrose the Governorship of the Bahamas, on the acceptance of which he retired from commercial pursuits. This post he assumed at the end of 1887, and it would be difficult to parallel the record he has made in that Colony during a short period of years. On his arrival the place was in a state of impending bankruptcy. The precarious resources, fruit, and sponge-fishing, were declining, and those having means were unwilling to invest a shilling in any untried adventure. The population was thinning by emigration to the Southern States, and no one thought of the future without misgiving. The prospect for a new Governor was cheerless in the extreme; but Sir Ambrose is sanguine, and he betook himself at once to an examination of the situation. He had not been a month in his position before he felt that he had lighted on a solution of the difficulties. His attention was attracted to a bold-looking plant of the aloe order, and he found on inspecting it that it held a fibre similar to manilla; and his experience enabled him to see that this had a stable commercial value, though he was not encouraged when he explained what he thought of the capabilities of this plant. He was told that attempts had before been made in the direction he proposed, but without any success, and that the plant was now universally regarded as a noxious weed, which defied all efforts to eradicate it. This was the prevailing feeling; but Sir Ambrose had formed a strong opinion, and gradually he gained assent to his views. The growth seems to set all ordinary adverse or disappointing influences at defiance, and the product is all but, if not quite, equal to the celebrated manilla-hemp. The exports of the Colony have hitherto averaged about £125,000 a year, but no one on the spot, who knows on what grounds the calculations rest, has a doubt that within a very few years the value of the exports will be quadrupled, and an output of a million is within range of the most reasonable contemplation. Land has gone up to four times its former value, and already the revenue responds to the industrial activity that prevails. These results are by common consent due solely to the ability and unflagging energy of the Governor. Sir Ambrose is the first Colonist who ever held the post of Imperial Governor, and his splendid success will be hailed with great satisfaction by Colonists everywhere, for there are few to whom his name as a prominent Colonist has not been long familiar. Sir Ambrose returned to England in January 1895, on the expiration of his term of office.

SIENKIEWICZ, Henryk, Polish novelist, was born at Okreya, in Podlasia, on an estate belonging to his mother. His family was originally Lithuanian, and removed to Poland in consequence of the Russian war; his grandfather served under Napoleon, and his father took part in the revolutions of 1830 and 1863. Having been educated at the Warsaw Gymnasium and the University, he emigrated in 1876 to California, to the colony that Madame Modjeska (q.v.) intended to found there. But the colony was a failure, and he returned to his own country, where his first literary work, the recital of his travels, was published in the Warsaw reviews. In 1891 he travelled to Central Africa with Count Tyshkevich. His great work is an early Christian story, "Quo Vadis," which he finished at Nice in 1896. It has been translated into almost every European language, and has given him a world-wide reputation. His other works include: "Szkice Weglem" (Sketches in Charcoal), 1874; "Ogniem I Mieczem" (Fire and Sword), 1885; "Potop" (The Hood), 1886. Most of his works have been translated by Mr. Jeremiah Curtin, the latest being "Hania," a collection of short stories, published in the spring of 1898. His next book is to be "The Knights of the Cross."

SIEVEKING, Sir Edward Henry, M.D., F.R.C.P., LL.D., F.S.A., Physician in Ordinary to H.M. the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, was born in London, within the sound of Bow Bells, on Aug. 24, 1816. He is descended from an old North German family, still flourishing in Hamburg, and was educated partly in England and partly in Germany. He commenced the study of medicine at the universities of Berlin and Bonn, and continued it at University College, London, and the University of Edinburgh, where he took his degree of M.D. in 1841. He travelled abroad, studying in Paris, Vienna, and Berlin. He practised among the English colony at Hamburg for four years, and while there contributed to Oppenheim's Medical Journal; wrote a treatise on Ventilation, a previously unconsidered subject in Germany, and built a children's hospital. In 1847 he returned to London, became a Member of the Royal College of Physicians, and four years later Fellow. After serving as Physician to the Northern Dispensary he was appointed in 1851 to St. Mary's Hospital, with which he remained actively associated for thirty-five years, and is now Consulting Physician. He has been President of the Harveian, and President of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society. His first publication in England was in 1849, and was a pamphlet on nursing, in which the provision of nurses for the poor, as part of a perfect system of state sanitation, was strongly urged. A paper on the same subject by Dr. Sieveking was subsequently read before the Epidemiological Society, and this led to the formation of a committee, which, for a series of years, sought to carry out the views advocated by him. Lord Shaftesbury on two different occasions introduced the committee to the Poor-Law Board, which gave its official support; but nothing came of it. The present appreciation of nursing, as an aid to curative medicine, may, in a great measure, be attributed to the work done by the committee. Dr. Sieveking was a co-translator of Rokitsky's great work on Pathology for the Sydenham Society, and subsequently translated from the German for the same society Romberg's work on nervous diseases. In 1854, with his colleague at St. Mary's, Dr. Handfield Jones, he published a work on Pathological Anatomy, of which a second edition has since been edited by Dr. Payne. From 1855 to 1860 Dr. Sieveking was editor of the British and Foreign Medical and Chirurgical Review, founded, and long carried on by Sir John Forbes. In 1857, on the recommendation of Sir J. Forbes, he was Physician in Ordinary to H.M. the Prince of Wales, and was offered the same position by Dr. Sieveking. In 1858 he was Physician Extraordinary to H.M. the Queen, and in 1859 he was Physician in Ordinary to H.M. the Prince of Wales. He was knighted in 1890, and received LL.D. Edinburgh, at the University of Edinburgh University: wrote Epilepsy, two editions; a work on Advice in Life Assurance; and delivered frequent addresses on medical subjects. He was Croonian Lecturer at the College of Physicians; and gave the Harveian oration there in 1887, in consequence of which the College of Physicians and Surgeons made him an Honorary Member. He was also the author of the publication of the MS. of the original Physiological Lectures given in 1616 et seq. Sir E. H. Sieveking filled many offices at the Royal College of Physicians. He was the President of the Edinburgh University Club, and a member of the Athenæum Club. He married in 1849, Miss Jane Ray, daughter of John Ray, of Finchley. He has five sons and three daughters. He resides at 17 Manchester Square, W.

Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Edinburgh and Cambridge, Consulting Surgeon St. Thomas's, was born on October 10, 1816, and is the son of Louis Michael Simon, for thirty-one years an influential member of the Committee of the Stock Exchange, and of his wife, née Nonnet. By both grandfathers he was of French origin, each grandfather having come to England (where he soon married an English wife) at about the beginning of the last quarter of last century. John Simon was educated chiefly at the Rev. Dr. Burney's school at Greenwich, spent a year in the family of a German Pfarrer, and in 1833 began the study of medicine at King's College, then of new establishment in the Strand, and St. Thomas's, under the famous Joseph Henry Green, who was Professor of Surgery at the latter institution. During the winter of 1837-38 he acted as Prosector to Dr. Todd during his course on physiology. On Aug. 24, 1838, he was allowed by Mr. Green to go up for examination at the College of Surgeons, although his hospital apprenticeship had not yet expired, in order to be ready for an appointment as Joint-Demonstrator of Anatomy at King's College, London. He held this Demonstratorship for nine years, his colleague being Dr. (afterwards Bishop) Macdougall. In 1840, on the foundation of King's College Hospital, the subject of our memoir was at once appointed Senior Assistant-Surgeon, under Partridge and Fergusson, his colleague being Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Bowman, who had become second to him in the Demonstratorship. The dissecting-room at King's College was not in those days one of the finest in London, and the future sanitary reformer's health suffered from constant confinement there. He was accordingly rescued from an increasingly difficult situation, when, in 1847, he received the very high honour of appointment as Lecturer in Pathology, and virtually as Surgeon, at his more familiar home, St. Thomas's, of which he is still an officer. At King's College his career had been practically a period of waiting; he had enjoyed considerable leisure there, and, in accordance with the honourable tradition of the medical profession in old days, had devoted much time to cultivated pursuits, such as the study of art, metaphysical literature, Oriental languages, which he studied in the Marsden Library at King's, and kindred subjects. These interests, which have been lifelong, and have left their impress upon his polished literary style, led him at different times into the society of a very varied and brilliant circle, including such names as William Wordsworth (to whom he was introduced by Green), Tennyson, Ruskin,

SKEAT, Professor the Rev. Walter William, Litt. D., LL.D., D.C.L., Ph.D., born in London, Nov. 21, 1835, was educated at King's College School; at Sir R. Cholmeley's School, Highgate; and at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1858, being fourteenth Wrangler. He was elected Fellow of his College in July 1860; became Curate of East Dereham, Norfolk, in December 1860; Curate of Godalming, Surrey, in December 1862; and Mathematical Lecturer at Christ's College in October 1864. He was elected to the recently founded Erlington and Bosworth Professorship of Anglo-Saxon at Cambridge, May 15, 1878; and re-elected to a Fellowship at Christ's College in January 1883. Dr. Skeat, who has chiefly devoted his attention to early English literature and English etymology, has published "The Songs and Ballads of Uhland, translated from the German," 1864; "A Tale of Ludlow Castle: a Poem," 1866; and "A Mæso-Gothic Glossary," printed by the Philological Society, 1868. For the Early English Text Society he has edited "Lancelot of the Laik: a Scotch Metrical Romance," 1865; "Parallel Extracts from twenty-nine MSS. of Piers the Plowman," 1866; "The Romans of Partenay or Lusignen; otherwise known as the Tales of Melusine," 1866; "The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman," five parts, 1867-84; "Piers the Plowman's Crede," 1867; "The Romance of William of Palerne; or William and the Werwolf," 1868; "The Lay of Havelok the Dane," 1868; "The Bruce; by Master John Barbour," four parts, 1870-89; "Joseph of Arimathea; or the Romance of the Saint Graal, or Holy Grail; with other Lives of Joseph of Arimathea," 1871; "Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolabe"; "The Wars of Alexander," 1886; "Ælfric's Lives of Saints," four parts, 1882-98; &c. In a new edition of Chatterton's Poems, he has finally settled the question of the authenticity of the so-called Rowley Poems, by showing the precise sources whence Chatterton obtained the old words which abound in them. Dr. Skeat was chosen by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press to continue and complete the work of the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar, the late J. M. Kemble, who died before his edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels was finished. In 1873, with the help of others, Dr. Skeat started the English Dialect Society, for the record and preservation of provincial English words, of which Society he was the Director for four years, and afterwards President. In the course of 1873 and 1874 six works were published for this Society, five of which were edited by him. The Society lasted for twenty-four years

1870-1871, during which time it issued eight publications, upon which the English Index Dictionary is mainly founded. For the Oxford Press he has edited several of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, a portion of "Piers the Plowman," and two volumes of Specimens of English Literature, one of them in conjunction with Dr. Murray also for the same press, the "Gospel of St. Mark in Gothic," an "Etymological English Dictionary," his last work, and an abridgment of the same, entitled a "Concise Etymological Dictionary"; besides two vols. on the Principles of English Etymology. In 1890 he completed a two-volume edition of "Piers the Plowman," showing all three texts, with notes, &c.; and, in 1897, a new edition of Chaucer's Works in seven volumes. A Scottish Text Society having been founded in 1886, Dr. Skeat edited the Society's first volume, viz., an edition of the King's Quair, by King James the First of Scotland; and, subsequently, a reprint of his edition of Barbour's Bruce. In 1896 he edited "The Student's Chaucer," in the volume; and in 1898 reprinted numerous short articles in a work entitled "A Student's Pastime." His various works have greatly contributed to the increased interest which is now taken in the intelligent study of our older literature. Address: 2 Salisbury Villas, Cambridge.

Mr. Smith has made five voyages to the Arctic regions. He visited them first in 1871, in the Samson, when he sailed to the north-east of Spitzbergen; reached latitude 81° 24', and added greatly to the knowledge of land in that direction: secondly, in 1872, in the Samson, to the north of Spitzbergen; thirdly, in 1873, with the Dianna steamer and Samson, again to Spitzbergen, when he relieved the Swedish Expedition, for which he received the Order of the North Star from the King of Sweden. In these three voyages he took deep-sea temperatures, which added much to the knowledge of the Gulf Stream, and established the fact of warm under-currents flowing beneath surface-water in that temperature. In 1880 he sailed in the Eira, and again went to Spitzbergen, attempting to reach the east coast of land, and to pass to the north of Spitzbergen, he returned to Spitzbergen; and steamed north, through much ice to Josef Land, on August 1st. To the west, he discovered nearly over 200 miles of new coast. He again started in the Eira to Josef Land, which he reached but unfortunately the Eira was stuck in the ice on August 21st, and many stores were saved. He had a hut of turf and stones erected, living mostly on bear. On June 21, 1882, they left and reached Nova Zembla. The next day they fell in with the Barents and the Hope, which to their relief, and they were taken on board the Hope. TH, George Barnett, was born at Wetherby, near Halifax, Yorkshire, May 1, 1841, and educated at the British Law School, Halifax. In March 1864 he came to London for the purpose of pursuing a journalistic and literary career. He was first engaged on the staff of the Standard newspaper, and afterwards for eight years on that of the Echo. He contributed to the Edinburgh Review articles on "The Works of Thackeray," "Recent Editions of Molière," "English Fugitive Poetry," and other subjects. Mr. Smith has contributed a great number of literary, critical, and biographical articles to the Cornhill Magazine, and has likewise contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the Fortnightly and British Quarterly Reviews, and Fraser's and Macmillan's Magazines. He is also a contributor to the Times and the Saturday Review, and has written many biographical and other articles for the "Dictionary of National Biography," and the new edition of "Chambers's Encyclopædia." His first published work was a volume of poems, 1869, followed by "Poets and Novelists," a series of literary studies, 1875; and "Shelley: a Critical Biography," 1877. In 1879 was published his "Life of Mr. Gladstone." Two years afterwards appeared the companion work, "The Life of Mr. Bright." Mr. Barnett Smith has edited, with introductions and notes, a work entitled "Illustrated British Ballads," in two volumes. He is also the author of "The Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria," and of "The Life of Queen Victoria"; likewise "Victor Hugo: His Life and Work"; this appeared in 1885; and his "William I. and the German Empire" in 1887. Mr. Barnett Smith is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical, Royal Historical, and other societies. In 1892 his most important work was published in two large octavo volumes, "History of the English Parliament, together with an Account of the Parliaments of Scotland and Ireland." This standard work occupied five years in preparation. Among the writer's most recent volumes are: "Eminent Christian Workers," a Biography of Ferdinand de Lesseps, and a volume of "Nineteenth-Century Studies," entitled "Women of Renown." In 1896-97 he wrote two volumes on "The United States," and one volume on "Canada," for a series of works on "The Romance of Colonisation," and in 1898, "The Right Honourable William Ewart Gladstone." Mr. Barnett Smith is known as an artist, and has published a number of etchings. Owing to prolonged ill-health he now resides permanently at Argyle Lodge, Surrey Road, Bournemouth.

SMITH-WILLIAMS, Mrs., née McKenzie, Marian, A.R.A.M., contralto singer, is the elder daughter of Captain Joseph McKenzie, shipowner, of Plymouth, where she was born. She studied singing under Mr. Samuel Weeks of that town, and, coming to London to complete her education, gained the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, also the Westmoreland Scholarship, and the bronze, silver, and gold medals of the Academy, the latter for declamatory singing. She was a pupil of Signor Randegger, and for elocution, of Mr. Walter Lacy. She has also studied oratorio singing with Miss Anna Williams, and has an extensive repertoire in works of the classical composers from Bach and Handel down to those of the present day. Among the latter we notice repeated successes in Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," and Dr.
Hubert Parry's "Judith." Besides having an established reputation as a festival singer, especially as principal contralto at the Handel and Bach festivals, &c., Miss McKenzie has achieved distinction in classic and ballad concerts. She has also sung at State Concerts and at Welsh Eis-tedfodds. With a voice remarkable for richness and sympathy, she is perhaps unrivalled for sweetness and distinctness in the use of the mother tongue. She is an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and of the Philharmonic Society. Miss Marian McKenzie married Mr. Smith-Williams, the brother of Miss Anna Williams, the soprano. Address: Prince's House, Victoria Street, S.W.

SMYTH, Charles Piazzi, LL.D.
Edin., F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E., for a time
F.R.S., and for forty-three years Astrono-mer-Royal for Scotland, was born in 1819 at Naples, and is the second of three sons of the late Admiral Smyth, but was educated in England. He commenced his astronomical service at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope, under Sir T.
Maclear, in 1835, and subsequently assisted in the re-measurement of La Caille's South African Arc of the Meridian. He was appointed, in 1845, to succeed Thomas

Henderson, First Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, in the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh. He applied himself, on arrival, to clearing off five years' arrears of computation and printing, and next to continuing Meridian star observations, besides establishing a daily time-ball, and afterwards an electrically-fired daily time-gun for the service of the city. In 1858 he was appointed to prepare for Government all the meteorological deductions furnished by 55 observing stations. In 1856, soon after his marriage with Jessie Duncan, he spent several months in testing, with her, the qualities of the Peak of Teneriffe for star observation above the level of the clouds. In 1859 he visited and published on the Russian Observatories. In 1864-65 he visited (accompanied again by his wife), investigated, and published on, the great pyramid in Egypt, and described the results in various works, one of which has just reached its 5th edition. In 1871 he began to compose a comprehensive star-catalogue and ephemeris of all the Edinburgh and best contemporary observations of the same stars, of which new kind of catalogue the first four hours were published in 1877 in the 14th volume of the Edinburgh Observatory's publications, and the last twenty hours were published in 1886, as the 15th volume. Then, with failing instruments and insufficient means for rectifying them, he applied for retirement, and obtained it in August 1888, and was awarded a small pension. He and Mrs. Piazzzi Smyth have since resided near Ripon, where he has devoted himself to solar photographic spectroscopy, and to watching and photographically recording cloud-forms. Address: Clova, Ripon.

SMYTHE, Lionel Percy, painter in oil and water-colours, was born in London in 1840, of English parents, and was educated at King's College School. He was elected a Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water-Colours in 1880, but retired in 1889. Being elected an Associate of the Old Society of Painters in Water-Colours in 1893, he became a full member in the following year, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts in 1898. Addresses: Château d'Honvault, par Wimilla, Pas de Calais; and 36 Gloucester Crescent, Regent's Park, London, N.W.

SNEBUS, George James, F.R.S., F.C.S., Bessemer Medallist, Vice-President of the Iron and Steel Institute, &c., an iron-master, was born June 25, 1837, at Camden Town, London, and is the son of James Snelus, a builder, who died when George James Snelus was seven and a half years of age, and the family was left impoverished by a long illness. Thanks, however, to his father, James Snelus was provided with a good education. He was originally a teacher at St. John's College, and for some years he acted as a city with great success in the conduct of Science Classes in the Science and Art Department. At that time he also attended lectures at Manchester, as a student of Roscoe, and the Physical Professor Clifton. In the examinations of 1864 he obtained the Royal Albert Scholarship, and with the whole of the University securing the Gold Medal in Geography, Bronze Medal in &c., and a free education for at the Royal School of Mines. There he was eminently successful, obtaining the first scholarship for the year, second scholarship for the year, and the first place and Beche medal for Mining in passing out as an Associate in mining and metallurgy. He was nominated by Dr. Percy for the position of chief chemist to the Works, which appointment he held for four and a half years, to the satisfaction of the late William Me in 1871, recommended him as a scientific adviser to the committee being sent out by the Iron Institute to the United States to study and report on the Danks Puddling Process. Mr. Snelus had studied the theory of all the processes of making steel and iron when at the time he had at this time formed an idea of the action of phosphorus on iron, and the investigation of this process enabled him to point out to Percy, on his return to England in the spring of 1872, that contrary to the opinion entertained up to that date by metallurgists, and in opposition to the opinion of the Doctor himself, that the phosphorus was eliminated in the puddling process by liquation, the phosphide of iron from the pig iron (ball), the phosphorus was eliminated in the early stages of the process, and while the iron was fluid and contained a large amount of carbon, and that therefore it was possible to eliminate the phosphorus by the Bessemer process: that he believed he had discovered the secret of overcoming the difficulty considered insurmountable. At the time he remarked that he had made a very great discovery, his discovery the Iron and Steel Institute in 1883 awarded Mr. Snelus being "the first to make impure iron in a Bessemer with basic materials." 10 tons of steel have since been made from phosphoric iron, prepared for steel-making. This is due to a large extent revolutionizing steel-making, and no country has been so much advanced owing to the stringency of the Laws of that country in 1850 as was unable to obtain a patent for the invention, and so has never received the reward or recognition which it deserves although his work has brought fortunes to those who have lived off the process. At the Exhibition in London Mr. Snelus showed some illustrations of the process, together with the phosphorous steel made by his process, and was awarded a Gold Medal for his series of inventions. At the Exhibition of 1878 Mr. Snelus showed a laborate set of analysed specimens illustrating the manufacture of steel in various countries, for which he was awarded a Gold Medal. The set was subsequently purchased as a collection for the Polytechnic Museum at Aix-la-Chapelle. Mr. Snelus, a principal member of the Iron and Steel Institute, has been a member of the Council since 1881, and in 1897 was elected one of the Vice-Presidents. The list of his most important papers includes the "Iron and Steel Process," 1870; "On the Condition of Carbon in Iron and Steel," 1870; "On the Gases evolved from the Blast Furnace during the Blow," 1871; "On the Process," 1871; "Science of the Danks Puddling Process," 1871; "Manufacture and Use of Fireclay and Refractory Materials," 1875; "Use of Direct from the Blast Furnace in Steel-making," 1876; "Removal of Sulphur during the Siemens-Martin Processes," 1879; "Distribution in Steel Ingots," 1881; "Position and Testing Steel," 1881; "The Iron and Steel on many points," 1881; his principal works include two able articles on "Chemistry, as applied to Manufactures." For his discovery of the process, in particular, the Royal Society made him a Fellow in 1887. He married in 1867 to Lavinia Wood, daughter of a silk manufacturer of Manchester, and has now a family of three daughters. Mrs.

Snelus died in 1892. Address: Ennerdale Hall, Frizington, Cumberland.

SOLLAS, Professor William Johnson, M.A., D.Sc. Cambridge, LL.D. Dublin, F.R.S., M.R.I.A., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Officier d'Académie, Professor of Geology and Mineralogy, Oxford; born May 30, 1849, at Birmingham, eldest son of William Henry Sollas, was educated in the City of London School, afterwards in the Royal School of Mines, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1882. He took his B.A. degree in 1873, subsequently D.Sc., and was made an honorary LL.D. (Dublin) in 1886. In 1893 he received the Bigsby Medal of the Geological Society. He was appointed Lecturer on the Cambridge University Extension in 1873, and for it delivered courses of lectures on geology in most of the large towns of England and Wales; in 1880 he was appointed Professor of Geology and Zoology in the University College, Bristol; in 1883 he was elected Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin; and in 1897 Professor of Geology and Palæontology in the University of Oxford. From 1895 to 1898 he was also Petrologist to the Geological Survey of Ireland. He has been continuously writing memoirs on scientific subjects since 1872. Most of these have appeared in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, Geological Magazine, and in the publications of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal Dublin Society. These have for subjects, amongst others, the relations of fossil to recent sponges, the replacement of silica (opal) by carbonate of lime, the origin of flint, of fresh-water faunas, the estuary of the Severn, the characters of plesiosaurus, glacial phenomena, particularly the nature of the movement of glacier ice and the origin of eskers, the structure and history of granite and other igneous rocks, and the anatomy of living sponges. He is the author of the article "Sponges" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and of the twenty-fourth volume of the Reports of the Challenger Expedition, treating of the Tetractinellida, 1888. He has paid special attention to theories of coral reefs, and in 1896 conducted an expedition sent by the Royal Society to investigate the coral island of Funafuti. He has travelled over many parts of Europe, North America, and Australia, and has visited several islands in the Pacific. He married Helen, daughter of W. J. Coryn, Weston-super-

Mare. Address : 169 Woodstock Road Oxford.

SOLOMON, Solomon Joseph, A.R.A., artist, was born in Southwark, Sept. 16, 1860. His father is a leather manufacturer, and his mother a native of Prague (Bohemia). He was educated at the school of Mr. Thomas Whitford, M.A., and privately by the Rev. Mr. Singer. His artistic training was begun in 1876, at Heatherly's School of Art in Newman Street, and the next year he entered the Schools of the Royal Academy. In 1879, through the kindness of H.I.H. Prince Lucien Bonaparte, he got an introduction to Cabanel, who received him into his studio in the Beaux Arts in Paris. The following year found him in Munich : but he thought little of the German training, and, after a tour round Italy and Holland, he returned to England, and exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy (a portrait of a gentleman). With his friend Mr. Hacker, Mr. Solomon journeyed through Spain, resting a while at the Shrine of Velasquez in Madrid, and passed the winter working in Morocco, where it was difficult at that time to induce the Moors to become their models. He again sought his master, Cabanel, and remained with him for about nine more months, having a studio of his own in Paris, and exhibiting at the Salon a portrait of Dr. Stevens, and, at the Royal Academy, a small highly-finished work, "Waiting." His next exhibit was "Ruth and Naomi," done in his garden in Tangier, on his second visit to Morocco ; and since then, every year, he has shown a composition and a portrait at the Academy. The picture which first brought him any reputation was "Cassandra," now in Ballarat ; then "Samson," "Niobe" following, and an allegorical work, "Sacred and Profane Love," with a portrait of the late Sir John Simon. Mr. Solomon was elected a Member of the Institute in 1887. At the Salon of 1889 he received a Medal for "Niobe," and in 1890, at the Academy, he exhibited "Hippolyte," and a portrait of "Mrs. George Mosenthal," full length. In 1893 he exhibited, at the Academy, two portraits and "Your Health !" and in 1894 "Mrs. Patrick Campbell as Paula Tanqueray," and a likeness of Mr. I. Zangwill. In 1895 he exhibited a portrait of Mr. Arthur Hacker, A.R.A., another of Miss Ingram, and "Echo and Narcissus" ; in 1896 a portrait of Mrs. Albert H. Jessel and "The Birth of Love" ; in 1897 portraits of George Frampton, A.R.A., Raphael Tuck, and Mrs. Adolph Tuck ; and in 1898 portraits of Mrs. Kenneth Foster, of his wife, of Sir George Faudel Phillips, Bart., and a Jubilee picture, "On the Threshold of the City." In 1899 he exhibited two portraits, at the same time. He has also recently painted for the Royal Exchange. Mr. Solomon was elected A.R.A. in 1896. In 1897 he married Hyman Montague, F.S.A., at John's Wood Studios, N.W.

SOMERSET, Duke of, St. Maur, Bart., J.P., was born 22, 1846, and is the son of whom he succeeded in 1874, daughter of John Philip M. at Dresden. SOMERSET, Lady Henry, in London, Aug. 3, 1851. She is the eldest daughter of Earl Somers, and in 1872 married Somerset, M.P., second son of Beaufort. She has one son, Somers Somerset, who is Lady Katherine Beauchamp, Duke of St. Albans. In 1871 Somerset was elected President of the British Women's Temperance Association, which is now the largest Women's Temperance Association in England. She was elected Vice-President of the World's Women's Christian Union. By the death of Mr. Willard in 1898, she took the place of President of the International Association, which numbers over half a million women. For two years she edited Women's Signal, a newspaper dealing with questions of the day. She has written magazine articles, and a series of short stories entitled "Black and White." In 1895 she founded the Industrial Farm Colony, and this scheme has now grown to considerable dimensions. In 1896, after the death of her father, she succeeded to estates in Herefordshire, Wiltshire, Surrey, and London. She has done a deal of platform work, and has the habit of addressing very large meetings in all parts of this country and the continent of America, in the cause of Temperance, and for the advancement of women. Address : 10, Castle, Ledbury ; and the Priory, Hereford.

of Australian life: "Clara Morison: a Tale of the Gold Fever," 1854; "Tender and True," 1856; "Mr. Hogarth's Will," 1865, and "The Author's Daughter," 1868.
Her little book on "The Laws we Live Under," with some chapters on political economy and the duties of citizens, was published under the direction of the Minister of Education in 1880, and is taught in the schools of South Australia.
She has taken an active part in the work of dispersing the Children of the State in natural foster homes, which was initiated first in that province under the leadership of Miss Emily Clark. This was so great a success both socially and financially that it was adopted all over Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand. She has contributed to the Cornhill, Fraser's, and Harper's Magazine and the Arena, as well as to Australian newspapers and to Australian magazines, literary, critical, and social articles, and has generally identified herself with all public movements, political and educational. The main object, however, of her life since the year 1860 has been electoral reform on the lines of equitable representation of minorities, and her "Plea for Pure Democracy," published in 1861, is an argument from the popular side for Hare's system of voting. In 1892 she thought that democratic developments in the colonies made the reform urgently necessary, and changed her position as a writer for that of a lecturer. On this mission she travelled all over her own province with ballot papers to give practical proof of this method of "Effective Voting." Having been appointed Delegate to the Chicago Congresses in 1893, and having received a Government commission to inquire into and report on matters of public interest in America and elsewhere, Miss Spence travelled through the United States, and paid a visit to Toronto, in order to explain and advocate this method of voting, as the only means of moralising politics and educating representatives and citizens. She visited England in 1865-66, and again in 1894, when she lectured before the Royal Colonial Institute and other audiences, on Social and Intellectual Aspects of Life in the Colonies. She resides at Eildon, East Adelaide, South Australia.

He arrived in Dublin Castle on May 6, on the evening of which day Lord Frederick Cavendish, the newly-appointed Chief Secretary, and Mr. Thomas A. Burke, the Under-Secretary, were stabbed to death by assassins in the Phoenix Park, close to the Viceregal Lodge. After this it fell to Lord Spencer to administer the provisions of the Crimes Act. In March 1883 Earl Spencer resigned the office of Lord President of the Council, but still remained a member of the Cabinet, until the close of Mr. Gladstone's Administra- tion in June 1885. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to office in February of the fol- lowing year, Lord Spencer became for the second time Lord President of the Council. By that time he had adopted Home Rule opinions, and his support was of great value to the Government. In August 1892 he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty, and held office until 1895. The University of Dublin conferred on Lord Spencer the honorary degree of LL.D., June 30, 1883. His lordship is Lord-Lieutenant, and was Chairman of the County Council of Northamptonshire. Since 1890 he has been Master of the Pytchley. In 1892 he became Chancellor of the Victoria University, Manchester. His lordship married Charlotte, daughter of Frederick Charles William Seymour, grandson of the 1st Marquis of Hertford. Addresses: 27 St. James's Place, S.W.; and Althorp Park, Northampton.

SPENCER, Joseph William, Canadian geologist, was born at Dundas, Ontario, Mar. 26, 1850. He was educated at M'Gill University and at Göttingen University, graduating at the latter institution in 1877. In the same year he was elected a Fellow of the Geological Society of Lon- don (England), and he is also a Fellow of the Geological Society of America and of other learned bodies. He was Science Master in Hamilton College Institute, 1877-79; Professor of Chemistry in King's College, N.S., 1880-82; Professor of Geo- logy in the University of Missouri, 1882-87; State Geologist of Georgia in 1888-93; and is now (1898) conducting geological investigations in the West Indies. His observations on the interesting geological phenomena of his native valley near Dun- das gave rise to enthusiasm in scientific work at an early age, and from his college days until the present time he has been engaged in original geological work. Many papers from his pen have been pub- lished since 1881 up to the present time in the American Journal of Science, the Bulle- tins of the Geological Society of America, the Journals of the Geological Society of Lon- don, the Royal Society of Canada, the American Philosophical Society, &c. He received the degree of Ph.D. from Göttingen in 1877. His work has been mainly in questions relating to surface and glacial phenomena, both in America and in Europe, and he was one of the pioneers in America in Lacustrine geology.

SPENDER, John Alfred, born at Bath, 1862, is the eldest son of Dr. J. K. Spender and of Mrs. Spender (author of many novels). He was educated at Bath College and Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1887). He was editor of the Eastern Morning News, Hull, 1886-90, assistant-editor of the Pall Mall Gazette till it changed ownership in 1892, then joined the staff of the Westminster Gazette, of which he became editor in 1896. He is author of the "State and Pensions in Old Age" (Social Science Series), and "The New Fiction and other Papers" (by the "Philistine"), which appeared originally in the Westminster Gazette. The humour of this work depended on the "Philistine's" apparently assumed ignorance of the names and reputations of the best-known younger men in the world of art and letters. He is Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society. His brother, Mr. E. Harold Spender, is a journalist and author. Address: 29 Cheyne Walk, Chelsea.

SPICER, Albert, M.P., J.P., is the second son of James Spicer, J.P., D.L., of Woodford, Essex, and was born in 1847. He was educated at Mill Hill School, and privately at Heidelberg. He is a wholesale stationer and manufacturer, and a member of the firm of James Spicer and Sons, which has seven branches in principal towns in London, &c., and the Colonies. He has been Liberal M.P. for the Monmouth District since 1892, is Treasurer of the London Missionary Society and of Mansfield College, Oxford, and was Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1893, and Joint Chairman of the London Congregational Union in 1897. He is the author of several pamphlets on social questions, and was member of special deputations on behalf of the London Missionary Society to India in 1881-82, and to the Samoan Islands in 1887-88. He also accompanied the late Dr. Dale to Australasia on behalf of the Congregational Union. He married a daughter of the late D. Stewart Dykes, Grove Hill, Surrey. Address: 10 Lancaster Gate, W.

SPIELHAGEN, Friedrich, a German novelist, was born at Magdeburg, Feb. 24, 1829, being the son of a Government official. At an early age he accompanied his father to Stralsund, where the sea made a lasting impression on the susceptible mind of the young man, who has in most of his works a life and incidents at sea of great force and vividness. He studied at the University of Bern, and then to Bonn, where he applied himself to the study of the law for a short time, then turned his attention to natural and literary studies, and was occupied with great zeal in Berlin and Göttingen. In 1854 he settled in Bonn, where he taught in the University till the sudden death of his father, which changed his circumstances and led him to his adopting literature. Since the year 1854 he has been occupied with ever-increasing success in novels, which have gained the most place among German fiction. His larger works are "Natural Natures," 1861 (with sequel, "Through Night and Day," 1861); "Hammer and Anvil," 1861; "Ever Forward," 1861; "The Swallow Sang," 1861; "Floods," 1878. He has also written "Hohensteins," 1864; "Falk," 1866; "Low Land," 1866; "Sana," 1880. Among his shorter works are: "Clara Vere," 1857; "Downs," 1858; "At the Tower," 1863; "The Rose of the Cross," 1868; "Hans and Margaret," a novel, 1868; "The Village Captain," 1868; "German Pioneers," 1873; "The Skeleton in the Closet," 1879; and "Angela," 1881; "Love for Love," 1875, and "Ulysses," 2 vols., 1884, a family novel with political background representing the period 1830-40; "Die Schwestern," 1885; "Noblesse," 1888; "A New Pharaoh," 1888. His poems appeared in 1891. His translations into German of Emerson, Michelet, and others, he published "Faustulus," which related his life in his "Recollections," published in 1889.

SPIELMANN, Marion, born in London (7 Mecklenburg Square, 22, 1858, son of Adam Spielmann of Lombard Street, and, late of Bedford House, West Brompton, was chiefly at University College School in a public school in France, and at University College, London, but he quitted early in order to enter the profession of engineering. Victor Julian Taylor, , Professor of French lan- iterature at King's College, ie fourth son of the late Dr. uthor of the famous dic- was born in 1860. He was the Lycée St. Louis, Paris, and at University College, Oxford. In 1881 he obtained the Taylorian Exhibition for French. and two years afterwards took his degree, with honours, in the School of Modern History. From 1883 to 1885 he was an Assistant-Master at the Merchant Taylors' School, and since then he has been Senior French Lecturer at "Wren's." His works include: "History and Literature of France in Synoptic Tables and Essays" (Riv- ingtons); "Rapid Exercises on French Gram- mar" (Rivingtons); "Graduated Course of French Prose" (Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.); "Drill on French Accidence and the Essentials of Syntax"; "French Vocabu- laries for Repetition" (Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.); "Practical French Primer" (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.); "Historical French Grammar and Etymological Lexi- con for Schools" (Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.); and several editions of Modern French Classics. He has been Examiner in French to the University of London since 1893, to the University of Wales since its foundation, to the Victoria University (1894-97), to the London Chamber of Commerce since 1893, to the Oxford and Cambridge School Examinations Board, &c. Since the foundation of the Modern Language Association he has been an active member of its committee, and is on the committee of the Société Nationale du Professeurs de Français; he is also a member of the Entente Cordiale, and in the summer of 1899 received the guests at an At Home given by this Society, at which Mme. Bernhardt and many other distinguished visitors were present. In 1895 he was decorated an Officier de l'Instruction Publique. In 1891 he mar- ried Florence, daughter of the late George Mathews, of Streatham. Address: 75 Lancaster Road, North Kensington, W.

SPRENGEL, Hermann Johann Philipp, Dr.phil. (Heidelberg, 1858); F.R.S. (London, 1878); Royal Prussian Pro- fessor, 1893; was born on Aug. 29, 1834, at Schillerslage, near Hanover, in Germany, where his father owned a property, and received his education first at the family home, by a private tutor, later at school in the town of Hanover, whence he re- moved to the Universities of Göttingen and Heidelberg, where he studied natural sciences (chemistry and physics in par- ticular), and took his degree Aug. 2, 1858 ("Examine rigoroso summa cum laude superato"). Coming to England early in 1859, he engaged in research work with the Professor of Chemistry at the University of Oxford till the middle of 1862; after which he settled in London, engaged in research work at the laboratories of the Royal College of Chemistry, Guy's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, till the autumn of 1864; and since then in work more or less connected with his inventions and discoveries. These, with some omissions, are: "Über einen neuen Löthrohr-apparat," Pogg. Ann., B. cxii., 1861; "On the Detection of Nitric Acid," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1863; "Researches on the Vacuum," ibid., 1865; "On Determining the Weight of Heterogeneous Liquids," ibid., 1866; "Improvements in Explosive Compounds," Engl. Pat., No. 921 and No. 2642, 1871; "The Water Air-pump," Phil. Mag., 1873; "An Air-bath of Constant Temperature between 100° and 200° C.," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1873; "A Method of Determining the Specific Gravity of Liquids with Ease and great Exactness," ibid., 1873; "A New Class of Explosives, which are Non-explosive during their Manufacture, Storage, and Transport," ibid., 1873; "Use of the Atomiser or Spray-Producer in the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid," Engl. Pat., No. 3189, 1873, and Chem. News, 1875; "Sprengel's Vacuum Pump, commonly called Bunsen's Pump" (London, E. & F. N. Spon), 1881; "Notes on so-called Panclastite," Chem. News, 1886; "The Hell Gate Explosion near New York and so-called 'Rackarock,'" Chem. News, 1885; "Use of Exhaust Steam in the Production of Sulphuric Acid," Engl. Pat., No. 10,798, 1886, and Chem. News, 1887. The more important among these refer to the two extremes in the gaseous state of matter—to vacua and detonating agents. As to vacua he discovered a new method of producing them, viz., by the fall of water or mercury in tubes, a method distinguished by its convenience and effectiveness. Thus we see, Chemical News, vol. xxix., p. 125, that in 1870 his mercury air-pump produced vacua so nearly perfect that the trace of air remaining in the exhausted vessel amounted to only  $\frac{1}{1000000}$  part of its original volume, leaving for further cultivation that field which lies between  $\frac{1}{1000000}$  and 0. The eyes of the scientific world turned towards this instrument in 1866, after the late Prof. Graham, Master of the Mint, had bestowed upon it (anent his then newly-discovered occluded gases) the following encomium: "The pneumatic instrument of Dr. Sprengel is peculiarly applicable to researches of the present kind. Indeed, without the use of his invention some parts of the inquiry would have been practically impossible" (Philosophical Transactions, vol. clvi., p. 408). Since then this instrument has become a most useful servant both in science and industry, and has been singularly productive of further important results, which to enumerate fully we have no space. Suffice it to point to a few, e.g., to Bunsen's filtering process, to Crookes's radiometer-work, and to Edison and Swan's incandescent vacuum-lamp industry. In his researches on explosives he is only briefly referred to here, but first to shake our ears with an infallible means of rendering a non-combustible, by virtue of a patent of 1871, which announced the use of certain nitro-compounds fired by a detonating force. These contain water up to 10% and was the first also who described (in Jour. Chem. Soc., 1873) the now called "cumulative" (Witt's Prometheus, Berlin, 1892, p. 230), by means of sensitive explosives, if explosion such as wet gun-cotton with a nitro-compound with 15% water may readily be exploded, of which every charge of 1 lb. has since been exploded up to 100 lb. As wet gun-cotton is now used on an extensive scale for military purposes, Sprengel's cumulative and first use of a hydrate of picric acid attained a high degree of importance. He was the first to apply (in 1873) to Picric Acid Mel as "a powerful explosive and detonator" ("The Inventor," Standard, April 10, 1890). At the time this material is largely used as a detonating charge for shells, the virtue of their prodigious effect greatly raised the influence of modern warfare. Witness the havoc which was made of the tomb at great ranges" by the (Times, Sept. 11, 1890), and He was the first who patented in England a substance called Safety-explosive, either of two liquids or of a solid, which are non-explosive themselves, but become explosive and are known as Hell Gate Panclastite, Rackarock, &c. in particular, consisting of potassium chlorate and 21% benzol, has recently been used in America, for it was chosen by Newton, Chief of Engineers, to rack a rock called Flood covering an area of nine acres at Hell Gate, an entry to the Hudson River, New York. The mine excavated this rock was charged with "rackarock," primed by 22 lb. of mite, and the whole exploded (costing £22,190), was succeeded Oct. 10, 1885. The explosion produced an earth-tremor of short duration, felt at a distance of 10 miles, and will be remembered as the first of its kind as yet recorded. A. Club, 107 Piccadilly, London.

of graduating in arts as well as in music, proceeding to Mus. Bac. in 1859, B.A.
1863, Mus. Doc. 1865, M.A. 1866. In 1860 Dr. Stainer had been appointed organist of the University Church by the then Vice-Chancellor, the Rev. Dr. Jeune, late Bishop of Peterborough, and he held this appointment, together with the organistship of Magdalen, until 1872, when he was appointed to succeed Sir John Goss as organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, which post he resigned early in 1888. He has composed a large number of anthems and Church services, as well as songs of a secular character, a Treatise on Harmony, educational Primers on Harmony, Composition, and the Organ. Jointly with W.
A. Barrett he has published a "Dictionary of Musical Terms," is joint-editor of "Carols New and Old," with the Rev. H.
R. Bramley, and with the Rev. W. Russell, of the "Cathedral Prayer-Book." He has achieved a high reputation as a scientific musician. A cantata by Dr. Stainer, "The Daughter of Jairus," was composed for,
and produced at, the Worcester Festival, 1878. In the same year he was nominated by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales one of the jurors of the Exhibition in Paris, and when it was closed he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. In 1883 his cantata, "St. Mary Magdalen," was produced at the Gloucester Festival. In the same year Dr. Stainer was appointed Inspector of Music to the Education Department in the place of the late Dr. Hullah, and also had the honour of being nominated a member of the Council of the Royal College of Music by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. In 1885 Dr. Stainer received the degree of Mus. Doc., and in 1895 that of D.C.L., honoris causa, from the University of Durham. In 1888 he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1889 was appointed Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, as successor to Sir F. G. Ouseley, deceased. He is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal College of Organists, and President of the Musical Association. In 1893 he received the distinction of being elected an Honorary Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon. In July 1899, he was entertained at dinner by the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, to commemorate the completion of the fiftieth year of his association with the Cathedral.
Addresses: 10 South Parks Road, Oxford; and Athenæum.

The year 1892 saw the production of two string quartets (op. 44 and 45), and a sonata for violoncello and piano (op. 39), and two sets of part songs. In 1893 he wrote in conjunction with Mr. Swinburne an ode, "East to West," for the Chicago Exhibition, which was first given in the Albert Hall; and a Mass in G major (op. 46). He was requested by Mr. Henry Irving to write the incidental music for the production of Lord Tennyson's tragedy, "Becket," for the Lyceum. He also published a further set of thirty Irish Songs and Ballads. His first opera, "The Veiled Prophet," was given for the first time in England at Covent Garden Theatre in July 1893. On the occasion of the Jubilee of the Cambridge University Musical Society in June 1893, when Saint Saëns, Bruch, Tschaikowsky, and Boïto conducted their own compositions and received honorary degrees from the University, Professor Stanford resigned the conductorship and took up his residence in London. His six Irish Fantasies for Violin were produced in London in 1894. In the same year the University of Durham conferred upon him, in conjunction with Lord Leighton and Sir Hubert (then Dr. Hubert) Parry, the honorary degree of D.C.L. A setting of Gray's ode, "The Bard" (op. 50), was first given at the Cardiff Festival of 1895, and in the same year his fifth symphony, "L'Allegro ed il Penseroso," was produced by the Philharmonic Society, and a Pianoforte Concerto (op. 59) was played by Mr. Borwick at the Richter concerts. Both these works formed part of a concert of English music conducted by Mr. Stanford at Berlin in December of that year. His Irish opera "Shamus O'Brien" was produced at the Opéra Comique in the spring of 1896, and after a long run both in London and the provinces, was given in New York and other American cities. At the Norwich Festival of the same year his choral ballad "Phaudrig Coshone" (op. 59) was first given. His most recent works have been a Requiem (op. 63), composed in memory of Lord Leighton, first performed at the Birmingham Festival of 1897, repeated by the Royal Academy of Music and the Bach Choir in London, and the Apollo Club at Chicago; a String Quartet, No. 3 (op. 64), composed for the Joachim quartet, and given by them both in Berlin and London; a Cycle of Songs from Tennyson's "Princess," for vocal quartet; and a Te Deum in honour of her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee (Leeds Festival of 1898). In 1897 Mr. Stanford was ap-

the region of Lake Victoria. This, after many encounters with the natives and the loss by death of 104 men out of 300, he found in February 1875, and found it to be the largest body of fresh water on the continent, having an area of 40,000 square miles.

He then pushed westward towards Lake Albert N'yanza, and was able to convince himself that it was not, as had been generally supposed, connected with the Tanganyika. Forced by the hostility of the natives to return to Ujiji, he intended to descend the great river discovered by Livingstone, and believed it to be the Nile, but which others thought was the Congo (and Stanley by his journey ascertained it was). It had been named by Livingstone the Luálaba, but by Stanley it was named the Livingstone.

The descent, chiefly by canoes, occupied him eight months, cost him the lives of thirty-five men, and was accompanied under the greatest difficulties and dangers. On reaching a settlement on the coast, a Portuguese national vessel came to him, and an English vessel conveyed the party to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence to England. Here his men were left at their homes; and Stanley reached England in January 1878. He has published an account of his first expedition, under the title of "How I Found Livingstone," 1872. His second expedition an account is given in "Through the Dark Continent," an abridged edition, 1885). The President of the French Geographical Society awarded the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour to Mr. Stanley at the Exposition Universelle, Paris, June 28, 1878. In 1879-80 he visited Africa again, sent there by the Brussels African International Association with a view to developing the great resources of the river Congo. The King of Belgium devoted from his private purse £50,000 per annum towards this enterprise. Stanley completed the expedition in 1884, having established trading posts along the Congo River from its mouth to Stanley Pool, 1400 miles by water.

A description of his labours in this expedition was published by him in 1885 under the title "The Congo and the Founding of its Kingdom." On Jan. 13, 1887, he was created with the honorary freedom of the City of London, just on the eve of his departure for a fourth time to Africa. His expedition was made for the purpose of relieving Emin Pasha, Governor of Equatorial Africa, whose condition was such as to induce him to leave Europe to have become precarious. Stanley fulfilled his mission, succoured Emin and brought him and his followers safely back to Egypt, but only after the most severe hardships endured in any of his explorations, and with a loss of over 400 out of the 650 men he had taken with him. Nearly three years were occupied in the journey. Among the important geographical results of the expedition were the discovery of the Semliki River, of Mount Ruvenzori (thought to be 17,000 feet high), of Lake Albert Edward, and of the south-western extension of Lake Victoria. Lake Albert Edward proved to be the primary source of the White Nile, and it was shown that its waters connect through the Semliki with the Albert N'yanza. Stanley reached Cairo near the close of 1889, and remained there until the following spring in order to write a record of the journey. This was published simultaneously in England, France, Germany, and the United States in June 1890, under the title of "In Darkest Africa" (2 vols.). His return to England was an unending ovation. The Universities of Oxford and Durham bestowed upon him the degree of D.C.L.; that of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge, and every institution and individual sought to do him honour. On July 12, 1890, in Westminster Abbey, he was married to Miss Dorothy Tennant, an artist of considerable talent, and a lady well known in society. She is the daughter of Sir C. Tennant. A controversy subsequently arose relative to certain incidents mentioned in a "Life of Major Barttelot," which amounted to charges against Mr. Stanley. He defended himself from these charges before undertaking a lecturing tour to America. On his return with Mrs. Stanley in 1891, he lectured in many parts of the United Kingdom, and in 1892 paid a visit to Australia. On his return he settled in London and took out a certificate of naturalisation. At the general election in July he stood as a Unionist for North Lambeth, but was not returned. During the controversy about Uganda he was strongly in favour of retaining that country. In November 1893 appeared his book on "My Dark Companions and their Strange Stories." In 1898 appeared his "Through South Africa," being an account of his recent visit to the Cape. He was created G.C.B. at the Birthday, 1899. Addresses: 2 Richmond Terrace, S.W.; and Cadoxton Lodge, Neath, Glamorganshire.

to 1857; was Secretary to the special mission to the Ionian Islands in 1858; appointed Governor of New Brunswick in 1861; Governor of Trinidad in 1866; Governor of Mauritius in 1871; the first Governor of the Fiji Islands in 1875; High Commissioner for the Western Pacific in 1877; Governor of New Zealand in 1880; and Governor of Ceylon from 1883 to 1890. In 1878 he was made G.C.M.G. In 1879 he received the honour of the Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford University. He was raised to the peerage in 1893. As an author he has published "Wilderness Journeys in New Brunswick," 1864; "Story of a Little War," 1879; "Life of Lord Aberdeen," 1893; together with pamphlets and articles. His wife, who died in 1889, was the eldest daughter of Sir John Shaw Lefevre. Addresses: The Red House, Ascot; and Athenæum.

STANNARD, Mrs. Arthur, "John Strange Winter," F.R.S.L., the popular author of "Bootles' Baby" and many other well-known novels, was born at York on Jan. 13, 1856. She was the only daughter of the late Rev. H. V. Palmer, Rector of St. Margaret's, York, who, before taking Holy Orders, was in the Royal Artillery, and was one of the officers selected to attend the coronation of Queen Victoria. One of her ancestors was the celebrated actress, Hannah Pritchard. Mrs. Stannard began her public literary career in 1874. Her first publication in volume form was a collection of military sketches entitled "Cavalry Life," issued in 1881, for which her publishers induced her to adopt the masculine nom de guerre by which she has since become so well known. In 1885 two stories from her pen, entitled "Bootles' Baby," and "Houp-la," appeared in the Graphic, and attracted immediate attention from the author's evident familiarity with army matters and child life. Up to this time it was universally assumed that the author was a cavalry officer, but when the success of "Bootles' Baby" had established her reputation as a writer on army life, she disclosed her identity. In 1892 Mrs. Stannard became the first President of the "Writers' Club," which is the first women's Press Club ever established. In 1893 she was unanimously elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, an honour which had only once before been conferred on a woman. She was married in 1884 to Mr. Arthur Stannard, a civil engineer, and has four children. Since 1896 Mr. and Mrs. Stannard have lived at Dieppe, and have prominently identified themselves with the interests of that town as a resort for English visitors. It is to their efforts that English tourists owe the Golf Club, of which she is secretary, and the Committee for Publicity and Information. Mrs. Stannard has written a letterpress for a handsome book setting forth the attractions of Dieppe. Stannard has published many novels, including: "Cavalry Life," "Regimental Legends," "Houp-la," "Pluck," "The March," "Army Society," "Gossip," "Mignon's Secret," "Mignon's Husband," "A Soldier's Confessions of a Pariah," "Children," "Beautiful Jane," "Dick," "Harvest," "A Little War," "Buttons," "Mrs. Bob," "Ferrers Court," "Heavenly Creatures," "The Other Man's Wife," "Lumley the Painter," "The Only Human," "My God," "Children," "Three Girls," "Smith!" "Aunt John," "Man," "The Soul of the Blameless Woman," "The Grip," "Into an Unknown World," "Peacemakers," "Heart and Hand." Mrs. Stannard presented the right of "A Soldier's Child" to the Victoria Hospital for Children, Villa des Rosiers, Dieppe.

STEEL, Miss Kate, was born at Liverpool, England, in 1847. Professor of Singing at the Academy of Music since 1877. As a child, she was remarkable for her extraordinary having then a high soprano natural flexibility. She studied and composition under Mr. Royal Academy, and with great proficiency on the piano. Mr. Walter Macfarlane. She came up to London, and in 1867, her sensibility and great talent seemed to point her out as a pianist. After a successful debut at the Hall, her wrists gave strain which made the recital impossible. Meanwhile she continued her vocal studies with such brilliant career in the concert hall, the stage seemed open to her too, she was doomed to it for no sooner had she appeared twice in public, and won gooat also proved unequal to strain now put upon profession, and she had to abandon this also. But so exceptionally a pianist could not be allowed to leave the Royal Academy, so her services were employed unofficially by Signor Ranieri for some years she was chiefly occupied in preparing his pupils. Subsequently he decided to offer Miss Steel the post of Lady Professor of Singing at which she accepted, and is the only lady Professor at the Royal Academy of Music. Miss Steel has been careful to place her own art on a scientific, and, above all, on a hygienic basis than has hitherto obtained after spending many years on some obscure points of psychophysics, notably the influence of the lungs on respiration and circulation, has established a complete physical and mental training, intended primarily for exercises, which attracted the attention of the medical faculty through its therapeutic value, and is being recommended for the cure of nervous exhaustion and other ailments. ON, Vice-Admiral Sir Henry, K.C.B., was born on 10th March 1812, and entered the navy in 1826. He served as midshipman on board the Agincourt in the Black Sea during the Crimean war, and was present at the siege of Kertch and the siege of Eupatoria. In 1857 he went to command the H.M.S. Raleigh, which was wrecked, and served in the Japanese war at Fatshan Creek and in the Indian Archipelago. During the Indian Mutiny he commanded the Pearl, and took part in every engagement against the mutineers, being mentioned in despatches for his services. The Naval Brigade awarded him the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. He was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1861, and had command of the H.M.S. Rattler on the lakes of Canada during disturbances in 1865. He was promoted to the rank of Admiral in 1881, and in the same year was appointed Commander of the H.M.S. Discovery, which formed part of an Arctic expedition. Upon returning to England he received the Arctic Medal and a C.B. (Civil Division). He was appointed equerry to the Prince of Wales in 1878, an honour that he retained till 1893. As Captain of H.M.S. Carysfort he served in the Egyptian war, being employed in the Suez Canal, and he also accompanied the Headquarters Staff in the night march from Kassassin. He was present at the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. For these services he received the Egyptian Medal with clasp, Khedive's Star, and the Osmanieh of the 3rd class. In the Mediterranean, from 1885 to 1888, with the Duke of York as one of his lieutenants, he commanded H.M.S.S. Thunderer and Dreadnought. Sir Henry was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen in 1888, and was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1890, and Vice-Admiral in 1896. He became successively Commander-in-Chief in the Pacific, and Senior Officer in Command of the Channel Squadron, and was promoted to a K.C.B. in June 1897. He is also a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of Dannebrog. Address: 56 Rutland Gate, S.W.

STEPHENSON, Rev. Thomas Bowman, B.A. Lond., D.D., LL.D. (Hon.), minister of the Wesleyan-Methodist Church, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1839. His father, the Rev. John Stephenson, was a minister of the same Church. Dr. Stephenson was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield, and graduated at the University of London in 1860. His first clerical appointment was to Norwich, where he took part in the then novel experiment of theatre preaching. Removing to Manchester in 1862 he threw himself into the various labours rendered necessary by the cotton famine; and then, and subsequently at Bolton, his attention was turned to those social and philanthropic problems which have specially engrossed his subsequent years. He held two charges in London, and in the year 1869 commenced the great group of institutions known as the Children's Home, by opening for waif lads a small cottage in Lambeth. He was a member of the second School Board for London, is an ardent "Temperance Reformer," and connected with several of the leading philanthropic societies. He has travelled extensively in many parts of the British Empire and in the United States, and has promoted, for many years, emigration, especially that of children, to Canada. He was elected in July 1891 to succeed Dr. Moulton as President of the Wesleyan-Methodist Conference, and visited the United States as President when the second Oecumenical Conference of the Methodist Churches was held in Washing-son. He is one of two representatives of Nonconformity on the Council of the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund, and has been prominently identified with the St. John's Ambulance Association. Address: The Children's Home, Alverstoke, near Gosport.

STIRLING, The Hon. Sir James, LL.D., a Judge in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, was born at Aberdeen, May 3, 1836, and is the eldest son of the Rev. James Stirling, George Street U.P. Church, Aberdeen, and Sarah Irvine. He was educated at the Grammar School and University of Aberdeen, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was Senior Wrangler and first Smith's Prize-man in 1860. He was called to the Bar in 1862; was reporter at the Rolls Court on the Staff of the Law Reports, 1865-76; junior Counsel to the Treasury in 1881; Member of the Bar Committee in 1883; and was raised to the Bench in 1886. He received the honour of the hon. LL.D. of Aberdeen University in 1887. He married Aby, eldest daughter of John Thomson Renton, Bradstone Brook, Shalford, Surrey. Addresses: Finchcocks, Goudhurst, Kent; 3 Hans Crescent, S.W.; and Athenæum.

STIRLING, James Hutchison, F.R.C.S. and LL.D. Edin., born at Glasgow, June 22, 1820, youngest son of William Stirling, of James Hutchison & Co., Glasgow, was educated at Glasgow University for nine consecutive winter sessions in arts and medicine, and spent six years afterwards in France and Germany. He became LL.D. of Edinburgh, 1867; and a Foreign Member of the Philosophical Society of Berlin, 1871. In earlier days he held appointments as surgeon to the Hirwain and other iron and coal works, South Wales, but he relinquished professional practice in 1851, and went to the Continent to pursue there those literary and philosophical studies for which, as a student at college, he had shown a taste, and in which he had gained distinction. Returning to England in 1857, he devoted himself to the study of philosophy.

and literary pursuits generally. Leaving earlier contributions out of view, he published in 1865 "The Secret of Hegel," from the appearance of which work there dates in Great Britain, academically and generally, a new movement towards the study of philosophy, more particularly German and ancient. A new edition of this work appeared in 1898. The following are the titles of his other works: "Sir William Hamilton, or the Philosophy of Perception," 1865; "Schwegler's History of Philosophy, translated and annotated," 1867 (11th edit., 1891); "Jerrold, Tennyson, and Macaulay, with other Critical Essays," 1868; "Address on Materialism," 1868; "As Regards Protoplasm," 1869 (2nd edit., 1872); "Lectures on the Philosophy of Law," &c., 1873; "Burns in Drama, together with Saved Leaves," 1878; "Text-Book to Kant," 1881; "Of Philosophy in the Poets," "The Community of Property," 1885; "Thomas Carlyle's Counsels," 1886. In 1888 he was the first appointed Gifford Lecturer; and, as such, he delivered, in the two subsequent sessions, courses of lectures on Natural Theology to the University of Edinburgh. These lectures, under the title of "Philosophy and Theology," were published in 1890. In 1894 he published his "Darwinianism: Workmen and Work." He has also contributed to periodicals. He married Jane Hunter, youngest daughter of William Mair, Irvine, Ayrshire. Address: Laverock Bank, Trinity, Edinburgh.

STOCKHAUSEN, Julius, was born in Paris, July 22, 1825. His father was a harpist, and his mother a well-known singer. Intended at first for the priestly calling, he received his early education at the school of Gebwiler in Alsace, and subsequently attended the College in Strasburg. His mother's success at a farewell concert given in Basle, however, changed the course of his life, and in 1845 he went with his father to Paris, and there became the pupil of Hallé and Stamaty for piano, and of the famous Garcia for singing. In 1848 he sang the part of Elijah in Basel, and with such success that from that time he gave himself up entirely to singing. In 1849 he came to England, where he continued his studies with Garcia, and in 1851 sang in the 9th Symphony in London. From 1857 to 1859 he was engaged at the Opéra Comique in Paris, where he specially distinguished himself in the part of the Sénéchal in Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris." There he formed a close friendship with Ary Scheffer, the painter, in whose house, together with Berlioz, Duprez, Pauline Viardot, and Saint-Saëns, German music was diligently cultivated. Concert tours followed in 1854-55. At Cologne he sang Schumann for the first time. In 1856 he entered the second period of his life as leader of the Harmonic Society; and in 1871, as the famous Stern Choral Society. Great as his success as a teacher has been, Stockhausen's importance culminates in his achievements as a singer. His voice perfect, and he had such command of the instrument that the power of the intellectual expression of his art was sacrificed the one to the other, an astonishing distinction of position, as well as its beauty of significance, was due to a profound understanding of the nature of the instrument of speech. Nowhere was there trace to be detected of a trace of after effect, or a display of effort. Joachim plays the violin, Schumann the piano, so does he sing and interpret the music of great masters. Scarcely ever has the reproductive power been distinguished for such purity and dignity. In 1878 began the first of his artistic career, that first at the newly founded Conservatoire in Frankfort-on-Main. However, he quitted in the fall of 1880. Since then he has been at the head of a singing school of his own, and has repeatedly, up to the most recent time, himself sung in concerts. His "Method of Singing," an important work, was published in Leipzig, and translated in 1888.

STOCKTON, Frank, an American writer, was born April 5, 1834. He graduated from Philadelphia Central High School, and began life as an engraver, and devoted engraving to devoted journalism. His earliest work was a number of fantastic tales which he contributed to the River and other periodicals. He became connected with the Philadelphia, and afterwards with the and Home, New York. He was on the editorial staff of the Century (now the Century), and on the management of St. Nicholas became an editor. His "Rudder of the Ship," which appeared in Scribner's, was first to attract general public attention, which he had successfully characterized of the short story, he is chiefly celebrated. The best known of these are: "The Tiger," "The Transference."

gage," "The Discourager," "Negative Gravity," &c. published novels entitled: "The Null," "The Hundredth," "The Claverden," and "The Cha," besides "The Casting Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Merry Chanter," "The Star Syndicate," "The Stories of the Thuglars," and "The Squirrel and the Dove"; also "Pomona's," "The Adventures of Captain Chap," 1895; "Captain Chap," 1896; "The Yacht," 1896; "Stories of the Sea," 1896; "The Great Stone of the Sea," 1896; "A Story-Teller's Pack," 1896; "The Associate Hermits," 1898, "The Holt, Convent Station," S.A.

STODDARD, Richard Henry, was born in Amherst, Mass., July 2, 1825. His father moved to New York, and he followed the trade of an iron-smith. In 1848 he began to write for the press in prose and verse. In 1851 he received an appointment in the Custom-House, which he held until 1861, the same time continuing to write. He has published: "The Poems," 1849; "Poems," 1852; "The Fairy-Land," 1853; "The Summer," and "Town and Country," 1857; "Life of Alexander von Humboldt," 1859; "Loves and Heroines," 1860; "The King's Bell," 1860; "The Story of Little Red Riding-Hood," 1860; "Under Green Leaves," and "The Poets," 1865; "Melodies of the Old," mostly from the Old, 1865; "The Children in the Wood," 1866; "Putnam, the Brave," 1866; "The Book of the East, and other Poems," 1867; new and enlarged editions of "The Poets of America," 1873; "The Poets of America," 1874; "Poets of England in the Nineteenth Century," 1875; "Memoir of Edgar Allan Poe," 1880; "Henry Longfellow," 1882; "The Poems and other Verses," 1892; and "The Evening Lamp," 1893. He has also a series of dainty works, the "A-Brac Series," 1874-75; and "The Poets," and more recently a series of volumes relating to English literature and memorabilia. In connection with others he published in 1877 a book entitled "Poets' Homes." He spent most of his time after leaving the Custom-House, as City Librarian, and is now the literary editor of the New York Press.—His wife, ELIZABETH STODDARD, born at Mattachusetts, in 1823, is also a contributor to periodicals, and has published three novels: "The Morgesons," 1862; "Two Men," 1865; and "Temple House," 1867. These novels have recently been reprinted, "Two Men" and "Temple House" in 1888, and "The Morgesons" in 1889, and have met with great critical success.

STODDART, Andrew Ernest, cricketer, member of the Middlesex Eleven, was born in South Shields on March 11, 1863. He was privately educated, and did not enjoy the cricket training which is to be obtained at public schools and at the universities. Indeed, though he played, he was not remarkable at the game. As a young man, too, he devoted his best energies to football, and gained celebrity as a three-quarter before he was ever heard of as a cricketer. He first came into notice as a batsman at Hampstead, where he made some big scores for the Hampstead Club, and thus earned for himself a place in the Middlesex Eleven in the latter part of 1885. From that time, when he was playing football in Australia, to the present day, he has been one of the finest bats in England, a bat second only to Dr. W. G. Grace. His most brilliant English season was in 1893, when both he and William Gunn scored over 2000 runs each in first-class matches, a feat only previously equalled by Dr. W. G. Grace. In a match against Notts at Lord's that summer he scored 195, not out, and 124. This was his highest score in a first-class match up to that date, though when playing for Hampstead Club against the Stoics, in 1886, he made his record score, amounting to 485 in one innings. This was said to be the highest individual innings ever played. In 1894 Mr. Stoddart took an English eleven over to Australia, and captained them throughout with brilliant success. In a match against All Australia, played at Melbourne on New-Year's Day, 1895, he made 173. In the series of five matches between the English team and All Australia played on this tour, victory rested with the English team. During recent years he has again headed English teams in Australia. Address: 30 Lithos Road, N.W.

STOKES, Sir George Gabriel, Bart., M.A., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., Sc.D., ex-M.P., born Aug. 13, 1819, at Skreen, co. Sligo, is the youngest son of the Rev. Gabriel Stokes, Rector of Skreen, and Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. John Haughton, Rector of Kilrea. He was educated at Dr. Wall's school, in Dublin, at the Bristol College, and at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1841, as Senior Wrangler, and was elected to a Fellowship. In 1849 he was appointed death of Mr. Beresford-Stowe, in 1881, he was returned as one of the representatives in Parliament of Cambridge University, and sat till 1892. In 1889 he was created a Baronet of the United Kingdom; and in 1892 retired from the Presidency of the Royal Society, and was succeeded by Sir William Thomson, now Lord Kelvin. He has also retired from the Committee of Solar Physics. In 1891 he published "Natural Theology," being the Gifford Lectures for the year, and has at various times contributed short articles on religious topics to periodical literature. He has published many papers on mathematics and physics in scientific journals, especially in the Phil. Transactions of Cambridge and of the Royal Society. In 1887 he delivered the Burnett Lectures on Light, and published them. His jubilee as a Cambridge Professor was celebrated in 1899. In 1857 he married Mary, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Robinson, D.D., Director of Armagh Observatory. Addresses: Lensfield Cottage, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

STORY, Mrs. Julian (Emma Eames), was born at Shanghai, on Aug. 13, 1867, and is the daughter of a distinguished American lawyer, employed at the time of her birth in the International Courts at Shanghai. She spent the first five years of her life at Bath, Maine. Her early musical studies were directed by her mother, herself a musician of talent. From 1883 to 1886 she developed her voice under Miss Munger, of Boston, and in the latter year entered the School of Mme. Marchesi, in Paris, under whose tuition and that of M. Pluque of the Opera, she studied diligently for two years. Her first engagement was at the Opera Comique in 1888, and in 1889 she made her debut at the Grand Opera in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliette," as remplacante to Mme Patti. She sang with the brothers De Reszke, and her success was immediate and overwhelming. She shortly afterwards still further added to her reputation by her impersonation of Marguerite. The late Sir Augustus Harris engaged her for the Covent Garden season of 1891. She made her first great English success in the part of Marguerite at Covent Garden on April 7, 1891, and at the close of the year won fresh laurels in America, in Mr. Grau's "ideal cast," which included the De Reszkes. She has won her chief successes as Marguerite and Juliette, but has also sung in most well-known operatic parts, is one of the glories of Covent Garden, and one of the world's most admired prima donne. She was decorated at Osborne in 1897 with the Jubilee Medal. In 1891 she married, in England, Mr. Julian Story, son of the well-known sculptor of that name, long a leader of the artistic English colony in Italy. Address: 7 Place des États Unis, Paris.

the Public Works Department in 1862; and Inspector-General of Irrigation in 1866. He was appointed additional Member of the Governor-General's Council

in 1869. He took an active part in the organisation of the Public Works Department, and improvement of the System of Accounts, as well as in the formation of the Meteorological and Forest Departments, and originated the scheme for the decentralisation of the finances of India. He also originated the measures taken by the Government for carrying out railway and irrigation works on a large scale by means of borrowed capital. On leaving India, in 1871, he was appointed Inspector-General of railway materials and stores at the India Office. In 1875 he retired from the army on full pay as a Lieut.-General; and in the same year was appointed a Member of the Council of India; which post he vacated in 1877, in order to proceed to India on special duty, viz., to arrange for the purchase by the Government of the East Indian Railway. He is Chairman of this railway and of the Assam Bengal Railway Company. He became Officiating Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General in 1878, and Officiating Military Member thereof in 1879; he also presided over the Famine Commission which was then formed. On his return to England, in 1879, he was reappointed to the Council of India, from which post he retired in 1889, and became Chairman of the East Indian Railway Company. STRINDBERG, Auguste, Swedish novelist and dramatist, was born at Stock- holm in 1849, and having been educated at the public school of his native town he was about to enter the University, when poverty compelled him to earn a livelihood instead, and he was by turns private tutor, theatrical super, telegraphist, and librarian, and even endeavoured to try painting and photography. Finally he resolved to de- vote himself wholly to literature, and be- came a successful exponent of poetry, journalism, social satire, romance, and drama. In all of these, however, the bit- terness of his early struggles and miseries exhibit themselves in the form of pessi- mism. This is especially seen in his hatred of women, which has been caused by domestic disappointment. After his first success he left Stockholm, and travelled through Denmark, Germany (where he met and became a disciple of Nietzsche), France, Switzerland, and Italy; everywhere preparing or writing works in- spired by the scenes he was observing. He returned to his native country in 1885 to answer an attack upon the supposed atheism displayed in his novel "Mariés," but such was his popularity that the accusation became, for him, a triumph. Among the better-known works of Strind- berg are: "Nuits d'un Somnambule," 1885, a set of poems; "La Chambre Rouge," 1879, a novel satirising Swedish

STUBBS, The Very Rev. Charles William, D.D., Dean of Ely, was born in Liverpool, Sept. 3, 1845, and is de- scended from the same Yorkshire stock as Bishop Stubbs, of Oxford. He received his earlier education at a Quaker school at Southport, and was afterwards sent to the school of the Liverpool Royal Institution, when he was contemporary with the pre- sent Bishop of Ripon. In 1864 he proceeded to Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge (Divinity Prizeman and Scholar of his College). He graduated in 1868, having obtained honours in the mathematical tripos. He subsequently won the Le Bas University Prize for an essay on "Inter- national Morality," which was published by Messrs. Macmillan. Ordained in 1868, he held the curacy of St. Mary's, Sheffield, from that year till 1871, during which period he became intimately acquainted with the labour question among the Shef- field grinders. In 1871 he became Vicar of Granborough, Bucks, on the presenta- tion of the late Sir Harry Verney, and took a prominent part in North Bucks in the agricultural labourers' agitation (1872), of which Joseph Arch was the leader. Whilst at Granborough, his church, on Sunday evenings, became a rallying-ground for the labourers who crowded to hear him; and he published a volume of ser- mons and addresses on "Village Politics." He held the appointment of Commissioner of Education to the Government of Siam (1878-81), and published a report on the training of Siamese students. In 1881 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Stoken- ham, Devon, by Mr. Gladstone. In the same year he was Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge, and in 1883 he occupied the pulpit of St. Mary's at Oxford. The Right Rev. George Sumner, Bishop Suffragan of Guildford, son of the Right Rev. George Sumner, Bishop of Winchester, and nephew of Archbishop Sumner, was born at Windsor, July 18, 1818. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, whence he graduated with his M.A. in 1848. He was ordained Deacon, and in 1848 he was elected to the Order of St. Swithin at Winchester, and in 1850 he was appointed to the Rectory of Old Alresford until 1885, for the last years of the time acting as Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of Winchester. In the year 1876 he was elected Proctor in the Lower Convocation of Canterbury and Bishop of Winchester, which until his appointment as Bishop Suffragan of Winchester, in 1884, gave him a seat in Convocation. A year later he was elected Prolocutor of the Convocation. In the year 1888 he was elected to the Bishopric of Winchester, and on that occasion he had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by decree of the University of Oxford. Winchester also conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He was born at Old Alresford, and his canonical residence at Winchester. In the year 1888 he was appointed Bishop Suffragan of Winchester, an office he now holds. In the year 1888 he edited a volume of the "History of Winchester" published under the title of "The History of Winchester," which passed through several editions; and in 1881 he published "A Day in the East," by Mr. Charles Richard Sumner, which also passed through several editions. In 1876 the Bishop published "The History of Winchester"; and in 1890 he published "The History of Winchester," showing the privileges, and duties, which have been conferred upon him. In 1848 he married Mary Elizabeth, younger daughter of Thomas Heywood, Esq., of Winchester. Address: The Close, Winchester, and Athenæum.

AND, Duke of, Croftland-Leveson-Gower, born July 20, 1851, and is the son of the 3rd Duke, whom he succeeded in 1892, and Anne, only child of John Hay-Mackenzie, who was created Countess of Cromartie. He entered the 2nd Life Guards in 1870, and retired as a Lieutenant in 1875. From 1882 to 1891 he was Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sutherland Rifles. From 1874 to 1886 he was Liberal M.P. for Sutherlandshire, is Alderman of Longton, and was Mayor in 1895-96, and Lord-Lieutenant of Sutherlandshire from 1892 to 1898; since 1892 has been Hon. Colonel of the Queen's Own Staffordshire Yeomanry, &c. He is a very extensive landowner. In 1884 he married Millicent, daughter of the 4th Earl of Rosslyn. SUTHERLAND, Sir Thomas, G.C.M.G., LL.D., M.P., son of Robert Sutherland and Christian, daughter of Thomas Webster, was born in Aberdeen, Aug. 16, 1834, and was educated at the Grammar School and University of his native city. At a very early age he entered the service of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company, and before completing his twentieth year he was sent by the Company to Bombay, and subsequently to Hong Kong, where he may be said to have begun his real career. In a few years he rose to be the head of the Company in China and Japan, the various stations in these countries being under a central management in Hong Kong. While in this position Mr. Sutherland not only succeeded in administering the affairs of the P. and O. Company with much success, so far as it lay in his power, but he came gradually to take a leading part in connection with local affairs in China, such as in founding the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, at present the greatest financial institution in the East, and the Hong Kong and Whampoa Docks Company, a corporation which owns the finest system of dry docks out of Europe. In a very large measure Sir Thomas Sutherland may be said to have originated both those important undertakings. In 1864 he was called upon by Sir Hercules Robinson, in highly flattering terms, to fill a vacancy in the Legislative Council of the colony, and serving there he took an active part in promoting the welfare of the colony, but in 1866 he returned to England to become associated with the management of the P. and O. Company in London. He did not, however, settle down in this capacity until nearly two years afterwards, subsequently to having made a complete tour of the whole of the Company's Eastern stations. Scarcely had he commenced his duties in London, when the Suez Canal

SWAN, Joseph Wilson, M.A., F.R.S., the second surviving son of John Swan and Isabella Cameron, was born at Sunderland, on Oct. 31, 1828. He was educated at Hendon Lodge and Hylton Castle, near Sunderland. Mr. Swan is chiefly known as the inventor of the incandescent electric lamp. After many years of tentative experiment he succeeded in producing a lamp of the type now so well known. In 1879 a degree of success was reached that gave complete assurance of the feasibility of electric lighting on the incandescent principle.
Early in that year Mr. Swan publicly exhibited lamps having all the essential features of the lamps which are now manufactured so widely, and which have brought electric lighting into general use, incidentally giving a great impulse to the use of electricity for many other purposes.
Among other electrical inventions of Mr.
Swan are : The miners' electric safety-lamp, improvements in the electric accumulator, and also in electric meters.
Mr. Swan's name is equally well known in connection with photographic inventions.
Amongst these are the "carbon process," better known as "Autotype," and the modern "dry plate," which has revolutionised the art of photography. He was also co-inventor, with the late Mr. Woodbury, of "Woodbury type," and an early school at the age of thirteen, and after some years of private study, repaired to Berlin, where she studied, not only German, but Greek and Hebrew. On her return to England she joined her family, which then resided in London, and while continuing her philological pursuits she studied the Higher Mathematics under Professor Newman. In 1843 she published a volume of translations, entitled "Selections from the Dramas of Goethe and Schiller." Her translation of Schiller's "Maid of Orleans" was published in 1847; and in 1850 the volume containing her translation of the first part of "Faust," with other master-works of Goethe, "Tasso," "Iphigenia," and "Egmont." In 1878 appeared her translation of the two parts of "Faust," 4to, with Hetch's illustrations, which was followed by a smaller edition in 1879. She was strongly urged by the late Baron Bunsen to undertake the translation of the Great Dramas. Acting upon his suggestion she translated the Æschylean Trilogy, published in 1865, which was followed, in 1873, by her translation of the complete dramas of Æschylus, with Flaxman's illustrations. NE, Algernon Charles, 1st Baron Swinburne, son of the late Admiral Swinburne, by Lady Jane Swinburne, daughter of George, 3rd Earl of Devon and grandson of Sir John Swinburne, Bart., of Capheaton, was born in Chester Place, London, April 5, 1835, bred as a commoner at Oxford, in 1857, but left without taking a degree. He visited Florence, and met with Walter Savage Landor's production, "The Queen of the Rosamond," two plays in 1861, attracted little attention in Calydon, a Tragedy, 1864; "Chastelard," a Tragedy, 1865; and "Poems and Ballads," 1866. The latter work was not very discerningly, was withdrawn from circulation. Moxon. Mr. W. M.

Rossetti then published "Poems and Ballads: a Criticism," and Mr. Swinburne himself "Notes on Poems and Reviews." Among his other works are: "A Song of Italy," and "William Blake: a Critical Essay," 1867 (2nd edit., 1868); "Siena: a Poem," 1868; the second part of "Notes on the Royal Academy Exhibition," 1868, the first part of which was written by Mr. W. M. Rossetti; "Ode on the Proclamation of the French Republic," Sept. 4, 1870; "Songs before Sunrise," 1871; "Bothwell: A Tragedy," 1874; "Essays and Studies," 1875; "Erechtheus," 1876; "A Note on Charlotte Brontë," 1877; "Poems and Ballads: Second Series," 1878; "A Study of Shakespeare," 1879; "Studies in Song," 1881; "Tristram of Lyonesse," 1882; "A Century of Roundels," 1883; another volume of "Prose Miscellanies," and "The Life of Victor Hugo," 1886; "The Armada," 1888; "A Study of Ben Jonson," 1890; "Astrophel, and other Poems," and "Studies in Prose and Poetry," in 1894. Mr. Swinburne is the greatest living English poet. He has not travelled very much, but with his family he stayed at Florence and on the Riviera, and with Sir Richard Burton he visited Vichy. Subsequently he spent some time with Mr. Watts-Dunton in the Channel Islands, and in Paris, where the two friends went to witness the memorable jubilee revival of Victor Hugo's "Le Roi s'Amuse" at the Théâtre Français. There Mr. Swinburne met Victor Hugo for the first time. For twenty years Mr. Swinburne has lived with Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton at the Pines, Putney. He is a good pedestrian, and his physical vigour is exceptional for a man of his years.

SYLVA, Carmen. See ELIZABETH, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

SYMONS, Arthur, was born in Wales, Feb. 28, 1865, of Cornish parentage. He was educated at various private schools, and has lived in many parts of England, in France, and in Italy. His earliest literary work was in connection with Shakespeare; he edited four of Quaritch's Shakespeare Quarto Facsimiles, in 1884-86, and afterwards seven plays in the Henry Irving Shakespeare, 1888-89. He has done literary criticism, chiefly of poetry, in the Athenæum from 1891, and in the Saturday Review from 1894. He edited the Savoy during the year of its existence, from January to December 1896. His play in one act, "The Minister's Call," was performed at the Royalty by the Independent Theatre, March 24, 1892. He has published, in verse: "Days and Nights," 1889; "Silhouettes," 1892; "London Nights," 1895; "Amoris Victima," 1897; in 1877. An Introduction to the Study of Barometrical and Thermometrical Observations. 1877. Address: Fountain Court, The Temple.

SYMONS, George James, F.R.S. was born in August, 1801, and is the only child of Joseph and Georgiana Symons. He was educated privately. Before he was twenty he had been elected member of the Meteorological Society, had given several lectures upon the subject, had commenced a series of observations with standard instruments, the records of which were supplied to Mr. Glaisher, F.R.S., for insertion in the "Quarterly Reports" of the Registrar-General; and had started in 1827 an organisation for the observation of thunderstorms and the record of injuries by lightning. In 1830 he was elected a member of the General Committee of the British Association, and is now a member of the Council. In 1831 he became a member of the British Meteorological Society, issued its first separate publication, "Notes on the Solar Eclipse of July 18, 1831," and accepted the invitation of Admiral Fitzroy, F.R.S., to become one of his assistants at the Meteorological Office, where he continued until nearly the time of his chief's death, being occupied principally with preparing for publication the records of the Anemometers at Bermuda and Halifax. During these years he devoted all his non-official time to collecting details of the fall of rain, and commenced the organisation known as the British Rainfall system, which now includes more than 3000 observers. The results have been published in 36 successive volumes of British Rainfall, and in 32 volumes of the Meteorological Magazine, which have been compiled and edited under his direction. With the above exception, Mr. Symons has written few books, but his papers and reports communicated to scientific societies in this and other countries, and his letters to the Times on meteorological subjects, are to be numbered by hundreds. In 1872 he was elected Membre de la Soc. Mët. de France, and has served three times on the Council. In 1873 Mr. Symons was elected Hon. Secretary of the (now) Royal Meteorological Society, which office he has held ever since, excepting during 1880 and 1881, when he was President. In 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute, and during that and the subsequent year drew up a complete summary of the statistics and bibliography of the meteorology of our Colonial Empire. The results of that inquiry were embodied in a paper which he read before the Royal Colonial Institute in 1877. In the autumn of 1877 another paper was presented to the Royal Engineers a paper on "Rainfall and Water Engineering," the summary of the Meteorological Service of telegraphic societies was published. In 1878 he was elected a member of the Council of the Royal Society, and his work extended over four years, acting throughout as a member of the "Department of Commerce." In 1879 he was President of the Congrès International de Médecine et de Chirurgie, and in 1880 Vice-President of the meeting. In 1879 he was elected a member of the Sanitary Institute, and the Health Exhibition of 1884, in which he was Membre Correspondant. In 1880 he was elected Membre of the Académie de Médecine, and in the autumn of 1880 he was elected Mitglied der Deutschen Akademie. In the autumn of 1880 the Congrès International was held at Biarritz, and Mr. Symons was appointed Vice-President, and subsequently Juror of the Congrès, afterwards visited the Pyrenees, and this led to the question of the exactness of the temperatures. After full inquiry, and with the sanction of the Royal Society, special thermometers, at the principal stations in 1887, determining the temperature to all possible precision. Mr. Symons was elected F.R.S. in 1878, and in 1884 a Committee of the Royal Society was appointed to report upon the eruption of Krakatoa, he was chosen a member, and subsequently presented a report. Henry, Bart., J.P., was Lancashire, in 1819, and ev. W. Tate. He was for d of the firm of Henry

Tate & Sons, sugar refiners, of Liverpool and London. He has long been engaged in philanthropic enterprises, and has given Lambeth a Free Library, which is equipped on a handsome scale. His libraries are alone sufficient to perpetuate his name, but these have of late years been put in the background by his grand donation to England of the Tate Gallery. Some years ago Sir Henry Tate learnt, to quote his own words, that "a great want was felt of some place where works of modern art could be seen at any time of the year." He decided that if he could succeed in obtaining from the Govern- ment a suitable plot of land he would build a gallery for a permanent exhibi- tion of British art. Sir William Harcourt warmly interested himself in his proposal, and, chiefly through that statesman's repre- sentations, the Government placed the site of Millbank Prison at his disposal. Here Sir Henry, then Mr. Tate, built what are known as the "Tate Galleries," the architect being Mr. Sidney Smith, and the contractors Messrs. Higgs and Hill. The new galleries contain an overflow of pic- tures from the National Gallery, the Chantrey Bequest pictures from the South Kensington Museum, a number of his masterpieces presented by Mr. Watts to the nation, and sixty-five modern pictures, chiefly illustrative of the pre-Raphaelite movement, from Sir Henry Tate's own collection. The trustees of the National Gallery have become trustees of the new institution, which Sir Henry Tate has made over to the nation and intends enlarging. The galleries were opened by the Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and other members of the Royal Family, on July 21, 1897, on which notable occasion the bene- ficent donor stated the objects and history of the gift, and was eloquently thanked, in the name of the British people, by the Prince of Wales, the Right Hon. A. Balfour, and the Right Hon. Sir William Harcourt. Sir Henry Tate received the honour of a baronetcy in 1898. He is one of the newly- created Trustees of the National Gallery. Lady Tate is a daughter of the late Charles Hislop. Address: Park Hill, Streatham Common, S.E.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Charles, M.A., D.D., Hon. LL.D. Harvard, Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and late Vice-Chancellor of the University, was born in Middlesex, May 27, 1840, and was educated at King's College School, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He proceeded to the degree of B.A. in 1862, and in the same year became an editor of the Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin Messenger of Mathematics. In 1863 he published his first work on "Geometrical Conics." He was elected Fellow of St. John's College in 1864, and Master of the same, 1881. and shortly afterwards received the degree of D.D., jure dignitatis. He is the author of numerous articles on Hebrew, geometrical and other subjects; of the Kaye Essay for 1867, on the citations from the Old Testament in the New, published under the name, "The Gospel in the Law," 1869; and of the following works: "The Dirge of Coheleth," 1874, a monograph giving a new and literal interpretation of the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes; "Sayings of the Jewish Fathers," in Hebrew and English, edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, 1877; an "Introduction to the Ancient and Modern Geometry of Conics, with Historical Notes and Prolegomena," 1881. In the Prolegomena he proves that the modern period properly begins with Kepler, who distinctly formulated the principles of infinity and continuity, which differentiate the modern from the ancient geometry. He has given a course of lectures at the Royal Institution on the "History of Geometry," 1886; also on the then lately discovered Διδαχὴ τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων, 1885; these were published in April 1886, under the title "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, with illustrations from the Talmud: two Lectures on an Ancient Church Manual discovered at Constantinople." More recently he has published "An Essay on the Theology of the Didache," 1889; and "The Witness of Hermas to the Four Gospels," 1892. He was joint-editor of the Messenger of Mathematics from 1862 to 1887. Dr. Taylor received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Harvard (Cambridge, Mass.), 1886; and was Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, 1887 to 1888. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1887 and 1893, and delivered the Macbride Sermon at Oxford in 1897; was an Alderman of Cambridge Borough from 1889 to 1895, and Acting President of the Statutory International Congress of Oriental Scholars held in the Temple in 1891. Addresses: St. John's Lodge, Cambridge; and Athenæum.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Isaac, M.A., Litt.D., LL.D., Canon of York, born May 2, 1829, at Stanford Rivers, is the eldest son of the late Isaac Taylor, author of the "Natural History of Enthusiasm." Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he obtained the Silver Oration Cup, and graduated as a Wrangler in 1853. In 1854 he edited a translation of Becker's "Charicles." He was ordained in 1857 to a country curacy, and published in 1860 "The Liturgy and the Dissenters." Removing to London, where he successively held two West-End curacies, he published in 1864 a work on the Egyptian Names, entitled "Words and Etymological Illustrations in Ethnology, and Geography," which passed through numerous editions. In 1865 he undertook the duties of the poorest parishes in the diocese. His plans and labours for the benefit of his destitute parishioners are recorded in a little book entitled "The Poor." In 1867 he published "The Family Pen; Memorials of a Family Literary, of the Taylor Family." In 1869 he accepted the rectory of the church at Twickenham. In 1870 he read a paper before the Philological Society, "The Etruscan Numerals," which brought out a volume entitled "Etruscan Researches," which was a condensed abridgment of his "Etruscan Language." Presented by Earl Brownlow, to the University of Settrington, in Yorkshire, for systematic researches into the history of the alphabet. These studies appeared in a volume called "Greeks and Goths, and the Runes," in which the mysterious runes received attention, now generally accepted by scholars. Shortly afterwards, at Berlin a paper "Ueber den Ursprung des glagolitischen Alphabets" was read, which discussed the origin of the Cyrillic alphabet. In 1879 he received the LL.D., honoris causa, in recognition of his discoveries and philological labours. In 1883 Dr. Taylor published two volumes, his most important work, "The Alphabet, an Account of its Origin and Development of Letters, and a consideration of its merits for the purposes of Classical Studies at Cambridge." It was unanimously recommended its author to the degree of Doctor in Letters. In the year (1885) he was collated to a Prebendal Stall in York. Two years later was appointed. In 1887 he read a paper at the meeting of the British Association, "The Origin and Primitive Language of the Aryans," which was afterwards incorporated into a volume, published in the Temporary Science Series in 1889. It received the honour of being translated into French by Dr. H. de Va. In the winter of 1887-88 he spent some time in Egypt, whence he wrote to the St. James's Gazette a series of letters recording his observations with Egyptians on social life, and on religion. These letters, which were published, with considerable controversy, published, with additional chapters on the tenets of Islam, in the autumn of 1888, in a volume entitled "Leave

e-book," with the object of judices as to the beliefs and Mohammedan fellow-sub-and elsewhere. "A Dead Heart," as Queen Catherine in "Henry VIII.," as Lady Macbeth, and Cordelia, as Rosamonde in "Becket," 1893, as Guinevere in "King Arthur," 1895, as Imogen in "Cymbeline," 1896, as Madame Sans-Gêne in the English version of the play of that name in 1897, and as the ci-devant Marquise in "Robespierre," 1899. Miss Terry's son plays under the name of "Gordon Craig," and made a spirited appearance in "A Dead Heart," &c. Address: Lyceum Theatre, Strand.

TERRY, Fred, was born in London in 1865, and is the youngest of the Terry family. He was educated in France and at Geneva, and made his first appearance on the stage in 1880, when at the age of fifteen he appeared at the Haymarket, at the beginning of the Bancrofts' tenancy of that theatre. He is well known as an actor of romantic parts, both here and in America, and is married to Miss Julia Neilson (q.v.), to whom, as leading lady, he has played in "Hypatia," "As You Like It," &c. Address: 27 Elm Park Gardens, S.W.

TERRY, Mrs. Fred. See NEILSON, JULIA.

TERRY, Kate (Mrs. Arthur Lewis), was first seen as Arthur in Kean's performance of "King John," on which occasion Lord Macaulay, who was present when the play was represented before the Queen at Windsor, wrote to the effect that "The little girl who acted Arthur did wonders. It is almost worth while to be past middle life to see Miss Kate Terry play this." This was the first of many Shakespearian triumphs. She played as Cordelia to Charles Kean's King Lear, at the Princess's; as Ophelia to Fechter's Hamlet, at the Lyceum; as Ariel, and as the Boy in "Henry V.," at the Princess's; and as Juliet to Henry Neville's Romeo, at the Adelphi. She doubled the parts of Viola and Sebastian in "Twelfth Night." For some time she appeared in romantic drama at the Olympic, and achieved one of her chief successes at the St. James's, when, as understudy to Miss Herbert, she played in Horace Wigan's "Friends and Foes," a version of "Nos Intimes." Other famous impersonations were as Monee in "Up at the Hills," an Anglo-Indian drama; as Lena in "Bel Demonio," where she played to Fechter, as the original Blanche de Nevers, in that great actor's production of "The Duke's Motto"; and as the original Mary Leigh in Boncicault's "Hunted Down," a play in which Irving took the part of Rawdon Scudamore. She made the part of Alice in Tom Taylor and Dubourz's play of "A Sister's Persecution" at the Adelphi, and won much success in Charles Reade's play from the son's poem. She returned in the spring of 1899 in "Hypatia," induced by Mr. John Hare.

TESLA, Nikola, inventor, was born at Smiljan, on the border of Austro-Hungary, in 1857. He was educated in schools, and then went to the Schule at Karlstadt, where he was in 1873; he devoted his efforts to experiments in electricity and magnetism against the wishes of his father, a priest of the Greek Church, who intended him for a priest. His genius was so strong in the domain of mechanics that he was allowed to pursue his studies at the Polytechnic of Gratz, and later studied at Prague and Budapest. He was thoroughly for the engineering. He served a short time in the telegraph engineering department as assistant, and later he went to America, where he was employed by one of the electric lighting companies in 1881. He later he went to America, where he made his home in the United States, and found employment at once in the establishment of Thos. A. Edison. He has always had the greatest reputation; but later he worked in a different part of the field of investigation. He was the first to propose a method of utilising effectively alternating current, and has made startling innovations and improvements in using currents of high tension. He lectured before the highest authorities in London, Paris, and New York.

Glasgow College in 1843, and left 8, after taking the degree of M.A.
c classics he obtained two prizes, ral Philosophy one, awarded by s of his fellow-students. During logical course at the United Pres-Divinity Hall, in Edinburgh, he obtained four scholarships, varying in value from £15 to £31, 10s. He was ordained to the ministry in West Calder United Presbyterian Church in 1852.

There he laboured more than six years;
was then translated to St. Paul's, Birkenhead; and thence, after fourteen years, was removed in 1872 to Westmoreland Road Presbyterian Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Thompson gave his chief strength to ministerial work, and was favoured with much success. At his ordination in West Calder the membership of his church was 250; at his removal it was 375. At his induction in St. Paul's Church, Birkenhead, the members were 33; at his leaving they were 153. In 1872 the members of Westmoreland Road Church were about 130; at the end of 1889 they were over 600. He was unanimously chosen Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England by the Synod of 1890. There he delivered an inaugural address on "The Spiritual Success of Christianity." He has been on the Newcastle-on-Tyne School Board. For many years he has been Chairman of the Works Committee; and throughout his career he has done everything in his power to secure for England the benefits of a liberal education. He published "Life-Work of Peter the Apostle," in 1870; and "Life and Writings of John the Apostle," in 1882.

THOMPSON, Joseph, F.R.G.S., African explorer, was born at Penpont in 1858, and at the age of twenty, visited Central Africa in company with the late Keith Johnston, and assumed the command of the expedition on the death of his chief.
In 1884 he began his famous journey to Masai Land, and was successful in reaching the north-eastern corner of Lake Victoria Nyanza. He published a description of his journey under the title of "Through Masai Land." In 1888 he started on an expedition to Morocco, during which he crossed the Atlas chain of mountains in six different places. In 1889 he published "Travels in the Atlas and South Morocco." He has received the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society, and is also Gold Medallist in geology and zoology at the University of Edinburgh.

THOMPSON, The Right Hon. Sir Ralph Wood, K.C.B., was born in 1830, and in 1853 became a clerk in the War Office, of which he was appointed Registrar in 1854. In 1871 he rose to be Chief Clerk, and in 1877 was appointed Under-Secretary of State for War. From 1878 to 1895 he was Permanent Under-Secretary for the War Department. He was created K.C.B. in 1882, and was sworn of the Privy became Senior Demonstrator on Photography in 1879, and of Professor C. L. Bloxam in 1880. He was appointed to the chair which he also held the Professorship in Queen's College, London, in 1887. Professor Thomson is a Fellow of the Chemical Society; he served on the Council of the Institute from 1880 till 1883, when he was elected one of the Honorary Officers. In this office he held till 1897, when he resigned, becoming a Vice-President. He became a Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry in 1878, held the office of Secretary of the Institute from 1887 till 1897, and is now the present Honorary Registrar.

He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1879, a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1880, and an Honorary LL.D. of the University of Glasgow and Honorary Member of Queen's College and King's College, London. Professor Thomson has occupied during his scientific career, taking at the same time part in the business of the Institute, in which he has been conducting his writings and lectures. He has published his papers "On the Electrical and Optical Properties of Nickel and Cobalt," in the Transactions of the British Association; "On the Determination of Nuclei in Determination of Supersaturated Vapour," in the Transactions of the Royal Society; "On the Chemistry of Pigments," in the Transactions of the Chemical Society; "On the Chemistry of Substances in Putrefaction and Antiseptics," in the Transactions of the Chemical Society; "On the Chemistry of Building Materials," (Cantor Lectures delivered at the Society of Arts). He is also the author of the article "Photography" in Rees's "Dictionary of Chemistry, Arts and Manufactures," and is the editor of the 7th and 8th editions of Bloxam's "Chemistry." Address: Addison Road, W.

THOMSON, Professor Joseph John, F.R.S., Cavendish Professor of Natural Physics, Cambridge, was born in 1830, at Manchester, and is the son of the late Mr. J. J. Thomson of Manchester. He was educated at Owens College, Manchester, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was a member of the Mathematical Tripos.

He was elected Professor of Natural Physics in the University of Cambridge in 1884. In 1894 he was elected to the Cambridge Philosophical Society. In 1896 he presided over the British Association. He is the author of a treatise "On the Motion of Solids," 1883; "The Application of Dynamics to Physics and Chemistry," 1888; "Recent Researches in Electricity and Magnetism," 1892; "Elements of the Mathematical Theory of Electricity and Magnetism," 1895, 2nd edit., 1898; and of various papers in the Transactions of scientific societies. He is a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and a Fellow of the Royal Society. Address: 6 Scrope Terrace, Cambridge.

THOMSON, Leslie, R.I., landscape painter, was born at Aberdeen in 1851, and partly educated at the Grammar School there. He has exhibited at all the leading exhibitions since 1873. His most recent Royal Academy pictures have been "A Stack-Barge, Essex," 1895; "Gold-hanger, Essex," and "A Bit of Dorset," 1896; "Dordrecht" and "A Spring," 1897; and "A New Forest Stream," 1898. Address: 98 James Street, Buckingham Gate, S.W.

THORBURN, Hon. Sir Robert, K.C.M.G., was born March 28, 1836, at Juniper Bank, in the county of Peebles, Scotland, and is the son of the late Robert Thorburn, Esq., of Juniper Bank, and Alison, daughter of the late Robert Grieve, Esq., of Kailatar, Perthshire, Scotland. He was educated in Edinburgh; went to Newfoundland in 1852; settled at St. John's, the capital of the island, where he has followed mercantile pursuits, and is now engaged in business. He was appointed Member of the Legislative Council of Newfoundland, Feb. 14, 1870, but resigned his seat in that body in 1885, when he entered the House of Assembly, and became Premier, which office he held till the close of 1889. Sir Robert Thorburn represented the Colony of Newfoundland at the Colonial Conference in London in 1886, when he received the honour of knighthood, and, being senior member of the Conference, had the honour of reading and presenting the address of the Conference to Her Majesty the Queen. He is now a Member of the Legislative Council of Newfoundland. He is by Royal permission an Honorary Member for life. He married, in 1865, Susanna Janetta, daughter of the late Andrew Milroy, of Hamilton, Canada. Address: St. John's, Newfoundland.

THORLEY, The Rev. George Earlam, M.A., Warden of Wadham College, Oxford, was born at Knutsford, in Cheshire, on Aug. 25, 1830, and is the eldest son of Robert Thorley, Commander R.N. THORNYCROFT, John Isaac, F.R.S., M.Inst.C.E., and naval architect, eldest son of Thomas and Mary Thorny-croft, the sculptors, was born on Feb. 1, 1843, in the Via Felice, Rome, where his parents were then studying classic art.
His mechanical training was commenced at an early age by his father, who made a locomotive, on which his children rode round his studio. The cylinders of this locomotive were afterwards adapted by his eldest son to form the engines of a very successful model steamer, which contained several of the most important elements to which the success of the modern torpedo boat is due, the closed stokehole and fan, by means of which air could be forced through the fire, and the relatively large size and low position of the propeller.
Rather later, when eighteen years of age, he constructed a small steam-launch, the Nautilus, which was the first steam-launch on the Thames that attained sufficient speed to keep up with racing crews. In 1863 he designed the Ariel, which was built at Chiswick, where he started almost as an amateur boat-builder. The Ariel was an example of a very fast steamboat, which was surpassed in speed by only the Miranda. The exact performance of the Miranda was measured by Sir Frederick Bramwell in 1872, and made a considerable sensation when published at a meeting of the Naval Architects. This boat may be considered as the progenitor of the torpedo boats of the present day.
The closed stokeholes, however, were perfected by Mr. Thornycroft only in 1876, in the Gitana, a yacht on the Lake of Geneva, which has never yet been beaten by a boat of similar size. After building the Ariel Mr. Thornycroft went for nine months as a draughtsman to Palmer's Shipbuilding Co., on the Tyne; he then went to Glasgow to go through the engineering course at that University, and obtained the certificate of proficiency in less than the usual time. On leaving the University he spent nine months at Mr.
John Elder's, of Govan, in studying the method of shipbuilding on the Clyde. He then returned to Chiswick, and became a builder of torpedo boats. In this profession he rapidly took the first place; and he has constructed a very large number of such boats for the British and foreign Governments. Among some of the more

It was in recog-high legal merits that the urlow was created a peer, l the woolsack, as Lord or close on twenty years. Lord Thurlow entered the ervice in the year 1858, and llowing became attached to at Paris. During 1860-61 was attached to the Earl of mission to China. He was e capture of the Taku forts and was one of the recipi-ina Medal. In 1862 he was ate Secretary to the Viceroy -General of India, and in ched to H.M. Embassy at

Vienna. During the years 1865-66 he was Private Secretary to Sir Frederic Bruce, H.M. Minister at Washington. Subsequently he was appointed Second Secretary in the Diplomatic Service, proceeding to the Hague in December 1866. He resigned that appointment in July 1870, and retired from the Diplomatic Service. He is a Justice of Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for the counties of Elgin, Nairn, Stirling, and Suffolk, and was a Lord-in-Waiting upon the Queen from September 1880 to June 1885, and from February to May 1886. From the April to the August of 1886 he occupied the position of Paymaster-General; and was also, in that year, appointed to represent her Majesty as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which holds its annual meetings in Edinburgh. He was then also sworn a Privy Councillor. He is Chairman of the Salt Union. He has published, among other works, "The Company and the Crown" and "Trades Unions Abroad." In 1864 he married Lady Elma, the only surviving child of the 8th Earl of Elgin by his first wife, Elizabeth Mary, who was the only daughter of Charles Lennox Cumming-Bruce, Esq., M.P., of Roseisle, Dunphail and Kinnaird, N.B. Lord Thurlow assumed in the right of his wife, and by Royal license, in July 1874, the additional names of Cumming-Bruce. Lord Thurlow has six children, and his heir, the Honourable James Bruce, was born in 1867. Address: Dunphail, Scotland.

THURSTON, Professor Robert H., LL.D., formerly of the United States Naval Engineer Corps, late Professor of Engineering, was born in Providence, R.I., Oct. 25, 1839. He is the son of Robert L. Thurston, who built his first engine in 1821, and founded the Providence Steam-Engine Company in 1837. R. H. Thurston was educated at Brown University, and received, during youth, a useful practical education in his father's workshops. When he left college, in 1859, he was familiar with the work of the draughtsman, designer, pattern-maker, moulder, the forge, and machine-shop. Mr. Thurston applied for appointment in the engineer corps of the navy, passed examination in the summer of 1861, and was ordered to duty on board the Unadilla. He was six years continuously on duty at the Naval Academy. In July 1871 Mr. Thurston accepted an appointment at the school of mechanical engineering at Hoboken, and for fourteen years filled the chair of engineering in the Stevens Institute of Technology, resigning his commission in the navy in 1872. He organised, about 1873 or earlier, what was probably the

which the author discovered that waters had previously been analysed by Liebig, and, in 1869, Tilden, in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, a new body, called colophonic hydrate. As Tilden was elected to the Royal Irish Academy and aided him in his researches for the Royal Dissociation. In 1870-71 he published many papers on dust as a particularly street dust. These are briefly described in Tilden and Parkes' "Manual of the Processes of Pharmacy" and many of the processes in pharmacopœia are based upon his experiments. He is now a member of the Pharmacopœia Committee of the Council of Education, and took an active part in the construction of the "Pharmacopœia" of 1898. He was made an Honorary Member of the Académie Royale de Pharmacie in 1880. He was elected to the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy in 1881, and to the Chicago College of Pharmacy in 1882. He published, in connection with his researches, a work entitled "The Chemistry of Coal-gas in Europe." Professor Tilden invented an instrument for determining the relative densities of gases, which was most highly valued by the Institute of Gas Engineers, and about 1888 he was associated with a syndicate, for the liquefaction, and utilisation of carbonic acid gas given off in the production of coal-gas. This Tilden process was successfully carried into effect at one of the largest breweries in England, Guinness's, of Dublin, and at several of the large breweries and distilleries in London, Paris, Melbourne, and Sydney. Professor Tilden's latest researches have been in connection with the production of coal-gas, and are to be published in the Journal of Gas-Lighting, 1893. He was elected to the Proceedings of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia for the year 1899 upon the subject of Dissemination of Micro-organisms. Professor Tilden is well known amongst art circles as a musician. He married, in 1871, the daughter of Surgeon-General Black Rock, co. Dublin, and has three daughters. Address: Pharmaceutical Society, Dublin.

Professor William Tilden, F.R.S., eldest son of John Tilden, formerly of the Bank of England, was born in London on the 15th of January 1817.

Having passed through public and private schools, he was educated at Eton and at University College, London, to be trained as a pharmaceutical chemist. Here he attended the lectures on Physics, Chemistry, and Botany, at the Pharmaceutical Society's School in Bloomsbury Square, and in 1860 followed Hoffmann's lectures at the Royal College of Chemistry. About this time he won the first Bell Scholarship awarded by the Pharmaceutical Society, and after attending courses of lectures on Physics by Tyndall, and Geology by Ramsay, at the School of Mines, he entered, in 1862, the research laboratory of the late Dr. Stenhouse, in the capacity of junior assistant. A year later he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry in the laboratory of the Pharmaceutical Society, where he remained seven years. In 1871 he obtained the D.Sc. degree Lond., and in 1872 was appointed Senior Science Master at Clifton, and there remained till 1880, when he was appointed the first Professor of Chemistry at Mason College. Dr. Tilden was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1880. In 1892 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Sciences from the University of Dublin on the occasion of the celebration of its 300th anniversary. He has completed three years' service as President of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland; he is also a Vice-President of the Chemical Society of London, and has served for two years on the Council of the Royal Society. In 1893 he was elected an Honorary Member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, Corresponding Member of the College of Pharmacy of Philadelphia, Honorary Member of the Society of Public Analysts, and in April 1894 was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Science, London. During his residence in Birmingham he held office as President of the Birmingham Teachers' Association, 1884, and of the Philosophical Society, 1886; as Vice-President of the British Association, 1886; and President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at its meeting in Bath, 1888. Dr. Tilden was for three years Chairman of the Academic Board in the early days of the Mason College. He is the author of some sixty papers in the Transactions of the Chemical Society, the Phil. Trans. of the Royal Society, the "Berichte" of the German Chemical Society, and other journals. He has also published several text-books, including recently "A Manual of Chemistry," 1896. Addresses: Royal College of Science, S. Kensington, S.W.; and 9 Ladbroke Gardens, Notting Hill, W.

Count Borosjenö Koloman, Minister of Hungary, was born Jan. 16, 1830, and educated for the law, but his career was set aside by the Revolution of 1848. In the years he devoted himself to the study of law, in 1859 first became known as a member of the Government policy of intolerance. In 1860 his policy was one of independence; he then sat in the Hungarian Parliament as a Moderate Radical. In 1875, in this branch to the united Diet, he became Minister of Justice, and subsequently Prime Minister of the Hungarian Cabinet. In the period of 1876-78, he opposed Slavism, being less vacillating than Count Andrassy, who kept between the views of Russia and Austria on the Eastern Question. In 1890, with his co-ministers when the votes were insufficient to meet the demands of the Bosnian occupation, he returned to his former position. In March 1890 he resigned the office and was succeeded by Count Tisza. On March 11, 1895, he delivered an important speech in the Diet at Budapest, in the course of which he severely criticised the attitude of the Liberal opposition in regard to the existing constitutional position between Hungary and Austria, and gave his whole support to the Government. At the beginning of the following year Mr. Tisza, in his speech on the Austro-Hungarian situation, declared his strong personal support of Free Trade, and asserted that the reasonable claims of Austria should be maintained, no alteration should remain but that of establishing a uniform customs system for each country. On Dec. 20, 1898, he delivered a remarkable confession of his position as a constitutional statesman in a speech in the Diet. After dwelling on the difficulties created by the vital interests of the country as a consequence of the policy of the Government, he referred to the course of action that had been taken in the treatment of Slavism in the House of Representatives. "All my life," he said, "I have been against the closure; but should there be a choice between the Constitution and the closure, I would give way for the latter. I am convinced that we cannot give way on this point, which would mean the abdication of the majority and the abolition of the cardinal principle of Parliamentary government that the majority must rule. We may learn what true Parliamentary government is from the English." Notwithstanding the compliment to this country in the last sentence, it was ably pointed out at the time that had Hungary copied the example of England, and devoted time and thought to the revision of Rules of Parliament, the constitutional difficulty in Austria-Hungary would never have arisen, and the necessity for government by decrees would have been averted. It has been said that Tisza has neither the glowing temperament of Gladstone nor the wise moderation of Deák. He knows not the art of winning the crowd, and while a truly remarkable man, he is not a great one. Still, the "General," as Tisza was popularly called by the people, has been a keen debater in his time, never at a loss for a reply, surveying his domain with sure gaze, detecting in cool blood the weaknesses of his adversary, and utilising them with patience and self-possession.

TITHERINGTON, The Rev. Arthur Fluitt, youngest son of W. Titherington, of Dee Hills, Chester, was born Nov. 14, 1865, and was educated at Arnold House, Chester, Charterhouse, and Magdalen College School, Oxford. He was elected Scholar (Classical) of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1884, took a second class in Moderations in 1886, a second class in Lit. Hum. 1888, and a second class in Mod. Hist. in 1889. After reading with pupils in Oxford, 1888-89, he was appointed to an Assistant-Mastership at Radley in 1889, and was ordained in 1890. In 1895 he was appointed Head-Master of Brighton College. Whilst at Oxford Mr. Titherington stroked the winning trial heat in 1886, and also stroked the University eight in 1887. He married Gertrude, the youngest daughter of W. J. Kent, Heatherley, Grassendale, near Liverpool, in 1891. Address: The College, Brighton.

TODD, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., M.A. Cantab., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., &c., Postmaster-General, Superintendent of Telegraphs, and Government Astronomer, Adelaide, South Australia, was born at Islington, July 7, 1826, and entered the Government Service at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in 1841. In 1848 he was appointed Assistant-Astronomer at Cambridge, under the late Rev. Professor Challis. In 1854 he was appointed Assistant-Astronomer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and in the following year he was offered, by the Secretary of State for

the Colonies. Lord John Russell, and accepted the appointment of Government Astronomer and Superintendent of Telegraphs in South Australia, and left for that colony in July 1855, where he introduced the electric telegraph system. In January 1870 the Colonial Government, having decided upon amalgamating the postal and telegraph services, appointed Mr. Todd Postmaster-General in addition to his duties as Superintendent of Telegraphs and Government Astronomer. Under his direction the telegraph was rapidly extended throughout the colony, his greatest work being the construction of a line from Adelaide through Central Australia, then a terra incognita, to Port Darwin, on the north coast, 2000 miles long, to meet the cable of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Co. This work was carried out, in the face of great natural difficulties, in the space of about twenty months, being completed towards the end of 1872, in which year Mr. Todd rode across the Continent and thoroughly organised the service; and, on his return to Adelaide, received from her Majesty the honour of the Companionship of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Shortly after this, the South Australian section, 1000 miles long, of the telegraph line from Adelaide to Perth was constructed under Mr. Todd's immediate direction. As Government Astronomer, Mr. Todd has carried out an extensive series of Astronomical and Meteorological Observations, the latter affording much valuable information on the climate of Australia, including the dry interior, and the north coast. He determined the position of the eastern boundary line of the colony, or 141st meridian; and, in conjunction with Messrs. Ellery and Russell, the Government Astronomers of Victoria and of New South Wales, he made a careful telegraphic determination of the difference of longitude between Singapore, Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney. In 1886 Cambridge University conferred upon him the degree of M.A. honoris causâ; and in 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London. He is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide University; one of the Governors of the South Australian Public Library; has been President of the Royal Society of South Australia; and is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide School of Mines, &c. He was made a K.C.M.G. in 1893. He married Alice, daughter of E. Bell, Esq., in 1855. Address: Adelaide, South Australia.

TODHUNTER, John, M.D., eldest son of the late Thomas Hervey Todhunter, merchant, was born in Dublin on Dec. 30, 1839, and educated in Quaker schools. At the age of sixteen he entered a cantile career in his father's business in Dublin and Limerick. Afterward he became a student in Trinity College, Dublin, and studied for a degree of B.A. in 1857, M.A. in 1860, M.D. in 1871. He spent his studies in Paris and Vienna, and returned to Dublin in 1874. He was Assistant Surgeon in the Cork Street Fever Hospital at the same time held the Chair of Literature in Alexandra College. On signing these appointments he came to London, where he devoted himself to literature. His works comprise: "The Beautiful," a Saturday Lecture; "Laurelia," and other Poems; "Alcestis," 1879; "A Story," 1880; "The True Tragedy," 1881; "Forest Songs," 1881; "Helena in Troy," a play, produced at Her Majesty's Theatre, and June 1886, and afterwards at Exeter; "The Bardic Poems," 1888; "A Sicilian Idyll," produced at Bedford Park, St. John's the Vaudeville Theatre, and at Campden Hill, between 1887 and "The Poison Flower," 1887. "Sicilian Idyll" at the Vaudeville Theatre. Dr. Todhunter has also produced a drama in prose, "The Black Cross," by the Independent Theatre, and the Opéra Comique in December, and "A Comedy of Signs," at the Miss Florence Farr's management, Avenue Theatre in March 1891. His published work is "Three Little Tales," 1896. He married Katharine, daughter of the late Mr. Ball, LL.D., of Dublin; and has two daughters, Dora Louisa, daughter of the late Mr. A. Digby, of Dublin. Address: Bedford Park, W.

TOLSTOI, Count Lyof Nikolaevitch, usually called Count Leo Tolstoy, the most eminent living Russian writer and social reformer, is a descendant of Count Peter Tolstoy, the friend and aide of Peter the Great, and was born Aug. 28, 1828, at Yasnaya Polyana, Government of Toula, but was orphaned at an early age. He received his usual education of a Russian nobleman, privately and afterwards at the University of Kazan. He spent the subsequent years in study till 1851, when, at the age of twenty-three, he entered the army, and accompanied his brother to the Crimean War. On the outbreak of the Crimean War he was called to Sebastopol and saw active service there, taking the command of a mountain battery, and assisting in the citadel. Resigning himself to literature. His "Peace" (1860), a tale of the Russia by Napoleon in 1812, is Russians as his masterpiece; "Karenina," which appeared better appreciated abroad. Tolstoi spoke most enthusiastically a few months before George Meredith says that beautiful but unfaithful wife, guilty passion by suicide, is perfectly depicted female character. Since the publication of his work, Tolstoi has given himself earnest working out of the life, the attainment of a higher moral philosophy. He makes

"Evil" the keystone of the arch, and insists that the literal fulfilment of the Sermon on the Mount is the rule of Christian life. His views are set forth in "Christ's Kingdom" and "My Religion." His "Anna Karenina," with its strange theory of life, was published in 1890. In 1891 Count Tolstoi deposited his diaries with the Curator of the Imperial Museum, on condition that they not be published till ten years after his death. In November he legally bequeathed his whole fortune to his wife.

In 1893 he published "The Kingdom of God within Us," a work on religion, and in 1894 "Patriotism," a criticism of the Russian Alliance, in a series of articles which appeared in the Daily Chronicle. Since the foregoing was written Tolstoi's influence has steadily increased. His personality and work have been the subject of much writing and discussion, appreciations, deprecations, innumerable paragraphs, have been printed before Europe, and his views by various activities—more particularly the Church at Croydon—marks a new epoch in which he is held by large numbers. In February 1895 the North American Review published an effusion exalting Tolstoi as the greatest living moralist, and compared his work with that of certain of his predecessors—unquestionably to their credit.

Three months later (May 1895) a Russian broke down completely, and was ordered a radiation of his property upon which he abandoned his preparation, and withdrew to his estate in Poland. In 1896 Tolstoi wrote a most powerful sermon of the Dukhobortsy sect, the year, had suffered greatly for their religion, and on the Russian Censor refusing to allow its publication, Tolstoi sought the hospitality of the Times, which devoted full space to his somewhat lengthy article. Evidently convinced that speech was denied him in his native land, Tolstoi continued to address his literary pieces to the English press, notably to the Daily Chronicle and the New Age, the former publishing on March 17, 1896, a long letter of Tolstoi's to a correspondent in England on the Venezuela imbroglio which had recently occurred between this country and America. This letter exhibited that habitual "other-worldliness" of the novelist which distinguishes all his writings, but was without doubt a strong indictment of war, and consequently of patriotism, inasmuch as he argued that the former cannot exist without the latter. Rumours became current during September 1897 that the great novelist was suffering from an illness which necessitated a serious operation, but on a member of the staff of the Odessa Listok visiting the Count at Yasny Polyana he found him quite well. He was then working hard at a preface for a forthcoming book on contemporary science, and was giving the finishing touches to his long-promised and eagerly-expected work on art, which was to be published in London in the Russian original as well as in an English translation. In the following month (October 1897) a complete vindication of Tolstoi's robustness, both physical and mental, was afforded by the appearance in the Peterburghskiya Vedomosti, the organ of Prince Ukhtomsky, who was rigorously condemning the Government religious persecutions, of a daring letter on the fanatical intolerance which incited these outrages. The writer's wrath was fully aroused owing to several cases of children being actually removed from the custody of their parents on so-called religious grounds. It was truly noted at the time by a prominent English journal that the publication of such an epistle from Count Tolstoi in a St. Petersburg newspaper was a significant sign and an unusual event. A few months later was published the before-mentioned work of Tolstoi's on art. This book, "What is Art?" attracted wide-spread attention, and much interesting and suggestive writing was the result. Mr. George Bernard Shaw (q.v.) contributed a striking review to the Daily Chronicle, but the fundamental principles of Tolstoi's essay did not receive any general acceptance. Mention should be made of the issue in the autumn of 1898 of an excellent little monograph on Tolstoi by Mr. G. H. Perris, who had previously written some articles in the Ethical World on "Ethics and Revolution in Russia."

ing of the New Adelphi. Webster, Mr. Toole became a comedian. He has for more years been a popular favourite, and in the broad region of those more important parts in and laughter equally pre-eminently as Caleb Plummer, in Dickens's "Cricket on the Hearth," the honest fireman, Joe in the drama "Through Fire and Smoke," and several years Mr. Toole has been a bit of making a professional provinces, where he is as great a success in the metropolis. In July 1875 on a "starring" tour to the United States, and made his American debut at the American Black's Theatre, New York, where he re-appeared at the Gaiety Theatre, London, Nov. 8, 1875. On Nov. 1875 he undertook the management of the Theatre, which he reconciled in accordance with all the wishes of the authorities, and re-named it after his own name—Toole's. In 1888 he published his "The Toole Tour." In March 1890 he made a tour in Australia, which was successful. His most recent work is "Walker," in Mr. Barrie's play "The Boy in the Dressing-Gown." 3, Albion Winegar, Ph.D., an American author and jurist, was born in Mansfield, Ohio, May 2, 1838. He graduated from Rochester University, 1859—served in the Union army and served in the Civil War. At its close he resided in Salisbury, N.C., where he resided 30 years. He was a member of the National Conventions in 1868 and 1875, and was one of the first to codify and revise the laws. He was elected Judge of the Court of the State in 1868, and continued in office until 1874. He edited "The Weekly Magazine," New York. He has been a Professor of Law at the Law School since 1889, and "The Standers' Notes," which appeared in the Chicago Inter-Ocean, from 1889 to 1891. He is the author of several works: "The Code with Annotations," 1877; "A Digest of Cited Cases," 1879; "Statutory Decisions of the North Carolina Reports," 1879. He is the author of the following novels: "A Royal Gentleman," 1874; "A Fool's Errand," 1879; "The Thistles," 1879; "Bricks and Mortar," 1880; "John Eax," 1882; "The Shares," 1883; "Black Ice," 1884; "The Inn," 1887; "With the Swallow," 1889; "Pactolus," 1890; "Murvale Eastman," 1891;

"A Son of Old Harry," 1892; "Out of the Sunset Sea," 1893; "An Outing with the Queen of Hearts," 1894; "The Mortgage on the Hip-roofed House," 1896; and "The Man who Outlived Himself: a Story," 1898. Miscellaneous Works: "An Appeal to Cæsar," 1884; "The Veteran and his Pipe," 1887; "Letters to a King," 1888. Since 1888 he has been a frequent contributor to the North American Review, Forum, and other magazines. His residence has been at Mayville, a village at the head of Lake Chautauqua, Chautauqua County, N.Y., since leaving the South.

TOWNSEND, Meredith, joint-editor and part proprietor of the Spectator, was born in 1831, and is the son of William Townsend, of Bures, Suffolk. In early life he went out to India, and during twelve years was successively sub-editor and editor and proprietor of the Friend of India. Returning to England, he became proprietor of the Spectator in 1861, and for many years edited the political department of that important journal, while the late Mr. Hutton was its distinguished literary chief. He now edits that journal jointly with Mr. J. St. Loe Strachey. Address of Spectator: 1 Wellington Street, Strand.

TOZER, The Right Rev. William George, M.A., D.D., was born in 1830, and is the third son of John Chapell Tozer, of Teignmouth. He was educated at St. John's College, Oxford (M.A. 1854; D.D. 1863). He was ordained Priest in 1855, and was Vicar of Burgh-le-Marsh with Winthorpe, Lincs., from 1857 to 1863, when he was ordained Missionary Bishop to Central Africa or Zanzibar. Remaining in this cure for ten years, he became Bishop of Jamaica in 1879, and was Bishop of Honduras from 1880 to 1881. In 1888–1889 he was Rector of S. Ferriby, Lincolnshire. Club: Oriental, 18 Hanover Square, W.

TRACY, The Hon. Benjamin Franklin, American statesman, was born at Oswego, N.Y., April 26, 1830. He received an academic education, studied law and began its practice as soon as he was of age. In 1853 and 1856 he was elected District Attorney of Tioga, his native county, and in 1862 was a member of the New York legislature. He was appointed, in 1862, by Governor Morgan, on a committee to organise recruiting for the United States army, and later commanded a regiment in the field, taking part in the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania; and subsequently being in charge of the rendezvous and prison camp at Elmira, N.Y. When mustered out at the close of the war

most he was transferred, in Keepership of the Natural History in the Museum of Edinburgh. He has also been Lectureship in Geology Museum for two periods of (183-88) and one of three years. Traquair's attention was drawn to the study of the structure among the extinct forms of rocks he soon found a rich field for original investigation. He has published over one hundred papers on Ichthyology, of which the most important are: "On the Structure of Tristichopterus alatus," Proc. Zool. Soc. Edin., 1875; "On the Structure of Palæoniscus, Amblyopterus, and Gyrolepis," *Quart. Jour.
Geol. Soc.*, 1877; "The Structure of the Platysomidae," *Trans.
Zool. Soc.*, 1879; "Report on Fossil Fish found by the Geological Survey in Eskdale and Liddesdale," Proc. Zool. Soc. Edin., 1881. He is also occupying the Fishes of the Devonian and Carboniferous of Britain for the Palæontological Society. Of Dr. Traquair's contributions to the structure of recent fishes the most important are his thesis, "On the Asymmetry of the Fishes," published in *Trans.
Zool. Soc.*, 1865, and his "Cranial of Polypterus," Jour. Anat. and Physiol. Attention should also be made to the Vertebrata of the Moray Fishes of Harvie-Brown and Buck-rate Fauna of the Moray Fishes, 1896. Dr. Traquair received the Neill Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1876; in 1881, Fellow of the Royal Society and in 1893 the University conferred on him the degree of LL.D. in recognition of his services to science. Dr. Traquair married, in 1873, Phoebe Anna, daughter of William Moss, physician, and has two sons and a daughter.
He resides in Park Crescent, Edinburgh.

R., Lord, John Trayner, of the Court of Session and Counselor of Justiciary, Scotland, born in Edinburgh on April 19, 1825, the son of Hugh Trayner.
He was educated at the University of Glasgow and Edinburgh, entered the Scottish Bar in 1858, and was Sheriff of Forfarshire in 1881, and a member of the Court of Session in 1887. His official title of Lord Tray-ner was conferred in 1887. He has been Lord Commissioner of Justiciary. He is also an member of the Scottish Railway and Canal Commission. He is author of a well-known work on "Latin Maxims and Phrases." In 1863 he married a daughter of R. S. Wyld, LL.D., of Gilston. Address: 27 Moray Place, Edinburgh, &c.

TREDEGAR, Lord, Godfrey Charles Morgan, Bart., D.L., J.P., was born at Ruperra Castle, Cardiff, on April 28, 1830, and is the son of the 1st Baron, whom he succeeded in 1875, and Rosamund, only daughter of General Godfrey Basil Mundy.
He was educated at Eton, and entered the army, joining the 17th Lancers, and as Captain Godfrey Morgan took part in the famous Balacava Charge in 1854. In an interview with a representative of the Western Mail he recently gave a graphic account of his experiences. Describing the advance just after Nolan's death, and when the battery of the Russian Horse Artillery opened fire, he said: "I do not recollect hearing a word from anybody as we gradually broke from a trot to a canter, though the noise of the striking of men and horses by grape and round shot was deafening, whilst the dust and gravel struck up by the round shot that fell short was almost blinding, and irritated my horse so that I could scarcely hold him at all. But as we came nearer I could see plainly enough, especially when I was about a hundred yards from the guns. I appeared to be riding straight on to the muzzle of one of the guns, and I distinctly saw the gunner apply his fuse. I shut my eyes then, for I thought that settled the question as far as I was concerned. But the shot just missed me and struck the man on my right full in the chest. In another minute I was on the gun, and the leading Russian's grey horse, shot, I suppose, with a pistol by somebody on my right, fell across my horse, dragging it over with him, and pinning me in between the gun and himself. A Russian gunner on foot at once covered me with his carbine. He was just within reach of my sword, and I struck him across his neck.
The blow did not do him much harm, but it disconcerted his aim. At the same time a mounted gunner struck my horse on the forehead with his sabre. Spurring 'Sir Briggs,' he half jumped, half blundered, over the fallen horses, and then for a short time bolted with me. I only remember finding myself alone amongst the Russians trying to get out as best I could. This, by some chance, I did, in spite of the attempts of the Russians to cut me down.
When clear again of the guns I saw two or three of my men making their way back, and as the fire from both flanks was still heavy, it was a matter of running the gauntlet again. I have not sufficient recollection of minor incidents to describe them, as probably all the men who were in that charge would describe it in the same way. When I was back pretty nearly where we started from I found that I was the senior officer of those not wounded, and consequently in command. There being only two others, both juniors to me, in the same position—Lieutenant Wainwright and Captain Cleveland afterwards killed at Kerman. We remained there till the evening, when, as the enemy made no further attempt to advance, we returned to our tents, not very far from the 15th to 17th Captain Murray, who retired from the army in 1888, represented the Conservative and the Conservative interest in the House of Commons. Since 1888 he has been Hon. Colonel of the Royal Munster Artillery Militia. Addresses: at Kerman, 1888, W. R. R. R. Castle, Kerman, to.

TREE. Herbert Beerbohm, actor and manager, son of the late Mr. James Beerbohm, a retail merchant, was born in London on Dec. 17, 1862, and educated partly in England and partly in Germany. In 1879 he entered his father's office, but shortly afterwards became devoted to dramatic living, gradually drifting into the profession and made his debut on the regular stage of the Theatre, London, in 1879, in the character of "Gummi". After serving for some time in the provinces, he appeared in London in "The Two Orphans" and "The Congress at Paris." In March 1884 he made a hit in the part of the Rev. Robert Spalding in "The Private Secretary" at the Prince of Wales's, and shortly afterwards played the part of the spy Macart in "Called Back." His great versatility and industry as an actor made him so famous that he determined to try management on his own account, and in 1887 he took the Comedy Theatre, where he produced "The Reliance," and played the part of an old English squire in perfection. Among his most successful productions at the Haymarket, which he took in the autumn of 1887, are "A Man's Shaving," "Circumstances," "The Village Priest," "Fear Astringent," "The Hamlet Manager," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "The Pantomime," "The Farago-Girl," "Himself," and "Hipparchus." 1892: "A Woman of No Importance," and "The Tempest," 1893: "The Quaker," "A Bachelor's Wife," and "The Merry Wives." 1894. In all these pieces Mr. Tree has taken principal parts, and has been supported by Mrs. Beerbohm Tree—Mrs. Hall, an accomplished actress, whom he married when she was a governess at Queen's College, Harley Street. Mr. Tree frequently makes known his views on the at Cambridge, where he was second in first class in classics. He was a member for Tynemouth, in the interest, in 1865, and for the Burghs in 1868. Mr. Trevelyan was appointed Civil Lord of Admiralty, in Gladstone's Government, in December 1868, but resigned office in July on a point of conscience connected with the Government Education Bill. He advocated a sweeping reform of the army, including the abolition of the purchase of commissions, both in and out of Parliament, and was for many years the foremost supporter of the extension of the Franchise. Mr. Trevelyan succeeded Mr. Shaw-Lefevre as Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty in November 1870, and held that office until his resignation, after the murder of Lord Cavendish, as Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (May 1872). This arduous post he held for two most trying years, and in December 1874 he joined the Cabinet as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third administration in 1885, he was appointed to the new post of Secretary for Scotland, resigning on March 27, 1886, in consequence of disagreement with the Prime Minister's proposed scheme for Ireland. He was elected to secure re-election after the dissolution of 1886, but in 1887 he was elected as member for the Bridgeton division of Glasgow. In August 1892 he became Secretary for Scotland in Gladstone's Administration. He resigned from Parliament in February 1897. He is the author of "Letters of a Competition Judge," republished from Macmillan's Magazine in 1864; "Cawnpore," in 1865; "Ladies in Parliament," "Horace at the University of Athens," and others, collected and published in 1868; "Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay," 1876 (2nd edit., 1877); and "The History of Charles James Fox."

He is married to Caroline, daughter of R. N. Philips, at one time M.P. for Lancs. Addresses: 8 Grosvenor Crescent, Wallington, Cambo, Northumberland; Welcombe, Stratford-on-Avon; and Æmum.

TREVES, Frederick, F.R.C.S., was born at Dorchester on Feb. 15, 1843, and received his medical education at the London Hospital, where he was afterwards Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery. He became F.R.C.S. in 1878, is a Member of Council and Member of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons, and, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to H.R.H. the Duke of York, Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge, and in Anatomy at the Universities of Aberdeen and Durham. He won the Jacksonian Prize Essay at the Royal College of Surgeons, England, in 1884; and as Hunterian Professor of Anatomy lectured in 1885-86, the subject in all cases being the Intestinal Canal. He is author of the following standard works: "Scrofula and its Gland Diseases," 1882; "A Manual of Surgical Applied Anatomy," 1883; "German-English Dictionary of Medical Terms," 1889; "A Manual of Operative Surgery," 1891; "The Surgical Treatment of Typhlitis," 1888 and 1891; "The Student's Handbook of Surgical Operations," 1892. He is editor of "A System of Surgery," 1895; and "A Manual of Surgery in Treatises by various Authors." He has also contributed largely to Heath's "Dictionary of Surgery," Morris's "Anatomy," Allbutt's "System," and other standard works of the same nature. Mr. Treves was appointed an Emeritus Professor of Surgery at the London Hospital in March 1899. Address: 6 Wimpole Street, W.

TREVOR-BATTYE, Aubyn Bernard Rochfort, explorer and zoologist, was born at Hever, in Kent, and is the second son of the Rector of Hever, the late William Wilberforce Battye, of Tingrith Manor, Beds., and Harriet, only daughter of Edmund Wakefield Meade-Waldo, of Stonewall Park and Hever Castle, whose ancestress, Ruth Hampden, daughter of the patriot John Hampden, married Sir John Trevor. He was educated at St. Edward's School and Christ Church College, Oxford (B.A.). He studied biology in his college days, under the then Linacre Professor, H. N. Moseley, of Challenger fame. On leaving the University he took to literary and scientific journalism, and wrote for the Saturday; but he is now best known as a zoologist who has travelled widely in little-known countries. He was the first white man to enter the farther parts of North-West Canada after the Riel Rebellion. He has also travelled on the Pacific sea-board of North America, in the north of Africa, Russia, Spitzbergen, Scandinavia, &c. In 1893 he investigated the Dwina Delta, after crossing to the White Sea, and explored the almost unknown Arctic Island of Kolquev, embodying these last experiences in his well-known book, "Ice-Bound in Kolquev," 1895. He has contributed largely to the scientific press, and has published: "Pictures in Prose," 1893; and "A Northern Highway of the Tsar," 1897. He is member of several learned societies. Address: 2 Whitehall Gardens, S.W.

Richard and Mary Ann Trimen, was born in London, Oct. 24, 1840, and was educated at a private school near Brighton, and at King's College School in London. He voyaged to the Cape in medical advice 1858-59, and was appointed to the Cape Civil Service, July 1859. He served in the Audit, the Colonial Secretary's, the Governor's, and the Crown Land's Offices, until 1870, when he was appointed Curator of the South-African Museum, Cape Town, a post from which he retired in January 1890. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, June 1884, and in 1887 was elected President of the Entomological Society of London; and is the author of "Indigastera Africæ Australis: a Descriptive Catalogue of South-African Butterflies" London and Cape Town, 2 vols., 1892-93, and "South-African Butterflies: a Monograph of the Extra-Tropical Species" London, 3 vols., 1887-89; also of various memoirs on Entomology, Ornithology, and Botany in the Transactions or Proceedings of the Entomological, Linnean, and Zoological Societies of London, the Quarterly Journal of Science, and other publications. He was President of the South African Philosophical Society from 1880 to 1883; and Commissioner of the Botanic Gardens, Cape Town, from 1876 to 1880. He was Chairman of the Phylloxera Commission, Cape Town, 1880; and represented the Cape at the Bordeaux Phylloxera Congress of 1881, and at the Congress of Zoologists held in Paris in August 1889. Address: 11 Chandos Street, W.

TRISTRAM, The Rev. Henry Baker, D.D., LL.D., Edin. and St. Andrews, F.R.S., C.M.Z.S., son of the late Rev. Henry Baker Tristram, Vicar of Eglingham, Northumberland, a grandson of Viscount Barrington, was born May 11, 1822, and educated at the Grammar School of Durham, and at Lincoln College, Oxford (B.A. 1844, second class Lit. Hum.; M.A. 1846). In 1845 he was ordained to the Curacy of Morchard-Bishop, Devonshire, which he was obliged to resign in less than two years in consequence of ill-health. At that juncture Admiral Sir Charles Elliot was about to proceed to Bermuda as Governor, and Mr. Tristram accompanied him as Chaplain and Secretary. He resided at Bermuda three years, and then accepted, in 1849, the small rectory of Castle Eden, co. Durham. In 1855 the state of his health again induced him to seek a milder climate. He spent that winter in the city and neighbourhood of Algiers, making excursions into the Northern Sahara. A second year was occupied in researches beyond the range of the Atlas Mountains, guarded as far as the southern frontier by Field-Marshal Bugeaud, General of Algeria, and on board a vessel which afforded him the opportunity of visiting Palestine. He was accompanied by Fisher, Lecturer in Geology at Greattham, Hampshire. On his return to Greattham, where he was appointed Rector, he was appointed Lecturer in Durham Cathedral. In 1856-57 he spent a year in the Northern Land, making a tour of identifying specimens. He made a similar tour in 1861, made an expedition to Palestine and the Levant, Syria and Armenia. In 1862 he made a tour to the Beaufort of the Arabian Desert, Jerusalem. In 1863 he visited the world, he spent a year exploring the little-known parts of Japan, in which his daughter engaged in missionary work. He was elected Convocation of the Faculty of Divinity and Provincial Grand Master of Masons for the two counties of Durham and D. Prov.-G. Master of the Province of Durham. He was elected to the Biological Section of the Association at Nottingham. Paul Cambon, the present French Ambassador in London (q.v.).

TUPPER, The Hon. Sir Charles, Bart., G.C.M.G., C.B., M.D., L.R.C.S. Edin., was born at Amherst, N.S., July 2, 1821. He is LL.D. of Cambridge and Edin., and M.A. and D.C.L. of Acadia College, Nova Scotia. He is Governor of Dalhousie College, Halifax (appointed by Act of Parliament in 1862); was President of the Canadian Medical Association from its formation, 1867, until 1870, when he declined re-election. He was a Member of the Executive Council and Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia from 1857 to 1860, and from 1863 to June 30, 1867; and Prime Minister of that Province from 1864 until he retired from office with his Government, on the Union Act coming into force on July 1, 1867; he was a delegate on public business from the Nova Scotia Government, 1858 and 1865, and from the Dominion Government, March 1868; leader of the delegation from Nova Scotia to the Union Conference at Charlottetown, 1864; to that in Quebec in the same year; and to the final Colonial Conference in London to complete terms of Union in 1866-67; he holds patent of rank and precedence from her Majesty as an Executive Councillor of Nova Scotia; was sworn as a Privy Councillor of Canada, June 1870, and was President of that body from that date until July 1, 1872, when he was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue, which office he held until Feb. 22, 1873, when appointed Minister of Customs. He resigned office with Sir John Macdonald in November 1873, and on the return of Sir John to power, was appointed Minister of Public Works in October 1878, and Minister of Railways and Canals in 1879. He represented the county of Cumberland, Nova Scotia, in Parliament for thirty-two years, in the Nova Scotia Assembly from 1855 until the Confederation in 1867, and thence in the Commons of Canada to 1884, when he resigned his seat in Parliament, and was appointed High Commissioner for Canada in London. He was appointed by the Dominion Government Executive Commissioner for Canada of the Antwerp Exhibition, 1885, and of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886, of which he was also appointed Royal Commissioner by the Queen. He received, in 1886, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (Cambridge), and the same day had conferred on him the honorary freedom of the Worshipful Company of Fishmongers of London. Just previous to the Federal elections of February 1887, he re-entered the Cabinet as Finance Minister, which position he retained until May 24, 1888, when he was re-appointed High Commissioner for the Dominion of Canada in London. Sir Charles was appointed one of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries to the Fisheries Conference in Washington in 1887, the result of which Conference was the signature of a treaty on Feb. 15, 1888, subject to ratification, for the settlement of the matters in dispute between Canada and the United States in connection with the Atlantic Fisheries. Sir Charles carried a Bill through the Canadian Parliament for the ratification of a Treaty, where it was passed in both Houses without division. He was created a Baronet under patent dated Sept. 13, 1888. In January 1896 he entered the Bowell Administration as Secretary of State and Leader of the House of Commons, and later in the year succeeded him as Prime Minister of Canada. At the defeat of his party at the polls, June 2, 1896, he retired from office, and was elected to the position in the new Parliament. Address: Ottawa, Ont.

TUPPER, Hon. Sir Charles Albert, K.C.M.G., LL.B. (Canadian), Canadian jurist and politician, born at Amherst, N.S.; was educated at Windsor and at McGill University and the University of Toronto; called to the Bar at the Ontario Bar in 1874, and to the Ontario Bar in 1882 he was elected to the House of Commons for Pictou, and re-elected in 1887 and in 1891. He was appointed Minister of Marine and Fisheries in that office under Sir John A. Macdonald until December 1894, when he was appointed Minister of Justice and Attorney-General under Sir Mackenzie Bowell. He was made a Q.C., and assisted the British Ambassador in London in the discussion respecting fur seals, and was chosen to be Lord of the Great Britain in the Parliament of 1895, which met at London. His zeal and ability in the case led to his appointment as K.C.M.G. In October 1896 he was appointed to the office of British Columbia.

TURNER, The Right Rev. Henry, D.D., Bishop of Exeter. A distinguished Bishop in the Anglican Church, and Rector of St. Andrew's, Exeter, is the eldest son of Thomas Turner, treasurer of the Exeter Diocese, and was born on Jan. 1, 1823. He was educated at Chelmsley and at Trinity College, Exeter, of which he was a Scholar. He was tenth Wrangler, and was ordained by the Bishop of Exeter of Godmanchester. He was Resident Chaplain to the Queen in London from 1873 to 1877, and resumed parochial work as Vicar of St. Saviour's, Fitzroy Square. After his return to Exeter in St. Pancras he succeeded Harry Jones as Rector of St. Andrew's, Exeter, a position which he held for fifteen years and only resigned in 1895. He became a Prebendary of Exeter in 1895. In the same year he was appointed an honorary Chaplain to her Majesty, and was promoted to be a Chaplain in Ordinary in April 1898. He has taken part in connection with many anisations in London, and fourteen years has served as chaplain under three Bishops. He was appointed Bishop of Suffragan to the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1898. He is married to a late Dr. M'Dougall, Bishop and subsequently Canon of the Isle of Skye: Westfield, West Hill, Glasgow; and Athenæum.

The Right Hon. Sir James G. Thompson, Premier and Treasurer, was born at Melbourne, Aug. 1845. He was educated at the Central School, and practised as a Solicitor and was elected a member of the House of Commons for St. Kilda in 1885. He took office as Commissioner, and continued to hold office until 1894. Mr. Shiels was reconstructed ministry. He has been Solicitor-General, Commissioner of Customs, and Minister of Finance. In 1894 he became the Leader of the Opposition, and the Patterson Government was overthrown on his motion. He returned to power at the general election, and became Premier on September 1895. He is well known as an advocate who came to England with the Premier for the Diamond Jubilee when he was made a Privy Counsellor and an Honorary LL.D. of the University of Edinburgh. He is a Member of the British National Federation, and the successful issue of its constitution in 1899 has been greatly due to his energetic advocacy of Federation. Address: 15, York-Carlisle Street, St. Kilda.

Professor Sir William Turner, M.D., D.C.L., F.R.S. London, F.R.C.S. London, and F.R.C.S. Edinburgh, was born in Lancaster in 1832, the son of William and Margaret Turner. He received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where he held a scholarship, and in 1853 he became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in England. As a student he won the Exhibition and Gold Medal at the University of London, and took his degree in Medicine in 1857. In 1854 he became Demonstrator of Anatomy at the University of Edinburgh; and in 1858, on the death of Professor John Hunter, he became Professor of Anatomy. He is Honorary Professor of Anatomy at the Royal Scottish Academy. At various times he held the following offices: Examiner in Anatomy in the University of London, Oxford, and Edinburgh; Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology in the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, and President of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. For many years he has represented the University of Edinburgh on the General Council of Medical Education, and is now the President, having been elected in the spring of 1898. In 1889 he was elected by the Senate of the University as one of their representatives on the University Court. He was made, in 1881, a Member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the Acts affecting the Medical Profession. He has written numerous articles on anatomy, both human and comparative, in the Transactions of various learned societies, in the Reports of H.M.S. Challenger, and in different journals, more especially in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, of which he is one of the founders and editors. Some years ago he was awarded by the Royal Society of Edinburgh the Neill Medal for his contributions to Scottish Natural History. He is a member of many scientific societies, and has received the Honorary Membership of the Royal Irish Academy, the Anthropological Societies of Berlin, Rome, and Paris, and the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society of London, the Royal Academy of Science of Berlin, the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester, the Obstetrical Societies of London and Edinburgh. The Universities of Oxford, Glasgow, Dublin, Montreal, Trinity University, Toronto, and Durham have conferred on him honorary degrees, and he has been elected a member of the Athenæum under the rule which admits those who have attained eminence in Science, Literature, the Arts, or Public Service. In 1886 he received the honour of Knighthood, and is D.L. of the City and County of Edinburgh. He joined the Volunteer force at its institution in 1859, and held for thirty years a commission in the Queen's Rifle Volunteer Brigade, Royal Scots, when he retired with the honorary rank of Lieut.-Colonel. In December 1898, on the occasion of the Jubilee of the St. Petersburg Academy of Medicine, he was appointed an Honorary Member of the Academy. He is married to Agnes, eldest daughter of Abraham Logan, of Burnhouses, Berwickshire. Addresses: 6 Eton Terrace, Edinburgh; and Athenæum.

TÜRRE, Gen. Stephen, born at Baja, in Hungary, in 1825, became a lieutenant in the Austrian army in 1848. His regiment was stationed in Italy, and his rooted dislike of the House of Hapsburg inspired him with a strong sympathy for the Italian cause. The Revolutionary Government of Hungary having called of the Vice-Presidents for 1899-1900. He has written largely on the Eye in Heath's "Dictionary of Practical Surgery." Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," the Transactions of the Ophthalmic Society, &c. Address: 100 Harley Street, W.

TWINING, Louisa, was born in London, N. v. 16, 1820, and is the daughter of Richard Twining. She was educated at home, and by attending Lectures at the Royal Institution, Queen's College, Harley Street, and elsewhere. She acted as Guardian of the Poor at Kensington from 1884 to 1890, and of the Tonbridge Union from 1893 to 1896. Miss Louisa Twining has been engaged in Poor-Law Administration during more than forty years. In 1858 she founded the Workhouse Visiting Society, for the purpose of looking after the poor, especially the incurably sick, in workhouses. The Society consisted of ladies, and these aimed, as their prospectus set forth, at the moral and spiritual benefit of inmates, but their labours naturally led to the whole question of pauperism coming before the notice of Parliament and of the nation. In 1858 she wrote an important letter to the Times, which has throughout seconded her in her labours, on workhouse nurses, their habits of intemperance, &c. In 1861, when a Select Committee on Poor-Law Relief had been appointed, she gave important evidence about the work of her society before the Committee. Four years afterwards, in 1865, the Lancet, in obedience, as it stated, to the best traditions of the medical profession, who had played their part for years in establishing kindlier relations between rich and poor, started its Sanitary Commission for Investigating the State of the Infirmaries of Workhouses. The work of this Commission is well known, and was doubtless originally suggested by the labours of Miss Twining. Among books published by the subject of our memoir may be mentioned: "Symbols and Emblems of Early and Mediæval Christian Art," illustrated, 1st edit., 1852; 2nd edit., 1884; "Types and Figures of the Bible," illustrated, 1855; and many writings on the subject of workhouses, including "A Paper on the Condition of Workhouses," read before the Social Science Congress at Birmingham, 1857; "Letter to the President of the Poor-Law Board," "Morning and Evening Prayers for Workhouses," "Readings for Visitors to Workhouses and Hospitals," "Metropolitan Workhouses and their Inmates," "Workhouses and Women's Work," "Recollections of Workhouse Visiting and Management during twenty-five years," 1880; "Poor-Law Relief in Foreign Countries and Outdoor Relief in England," 1884; "Workhouse Pauperism," 1898. Address: 100 Harley Street, W.

TYLOR, Professor Edmund, D.C.L., LL.D., was born at Camberwell, and educated at the School of Friends, Grovehill. His work has been steadily the study of the races of humanity, languages, and customs, time when anthropology was having attained to the position now receives, and was the subject for instruction in the fortune of accompanying Henry Christy, on a journey in 1856, the archaeological collection in the Ethnological Collection in the British Museum. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, received the honorary degree from the University of Oxford in 1873, and of D.C.L. from Oxford in 1875. In 1875 he was Keeper of the Oxford Museum and Reader in Anthropology. On the subject he became in 1875 professor. In 1888 he was elected Gifford Lecturer by the University of Aberdeen, delivering a two-part "Natural Religion," the results in which still await complete publication. Dr. Tylor has been of the Anthropological Institute, 1880 and 1891-92. He is the author of "Anahuac, or Mexico and the Aztecs," 1861; "Researches into the History of Mankind," 1865; and "Primitive Researches into the Development of Language, Philosophy, Religion, Art, and Civilization," 2 vols., 1871 (3rd ed., 1881). His more recent work is an edition of the book of the Science of Man and Civilization: an introduction to the study of Man and Civilisation, 1881. In 1858, Anna, daughter of Sylvanus Fox, of Wellington, was his wife. Address: Museum House, 61, Athenæum.

UDNY, Sir Richard, K.C.S.I., late Commissioner of the Peshawar Division, Punjab, was born in 1847, and is the eldest son of the late George Udny, H.E.I.C.S., Sub-Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal, and pursuer in the famous real property case of Udny v. Udny, and Anne Lydia, second daughter of the late Samuel Tomkins, banker, of Lombard Street. He was educated at schools at St. Andrews, and at Aberdeen University, where he took the M.A. degree in 1866, after obtaining first class honours in Mathematics and a second class in Classics. In 1867 he obtained the Fullerton Mathematical Scholarship at Aberdeen, and subsequently spent a term or two at Cambridge. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1869, and has served as political officer with the Jawaki Expedition, 1877-78; the Mahsud Wazir Expedition, 1881; the Samana (Miranzai), 1891, and Isazai or Black Mountain Expedition in 1892, for which he obtained a medal and two clasps. He was appointed on a special mission to the Kurram Valley in 1888, and was Commissioner for the delimitation of sections of the Indo-Afghan Boundary in 1894-95 and 1896-97. From 1891 to 1898 he was Commissioner of the Peshawar Division. His position here has been most responsible. He has been thrown into constant intercourse with wild tribes, members of which have not infrequently shot at him as he has ridden among their mountains. His tact, and his extreme versatility as a linguist, however, have endeared him to the frontier tribesmen, and their revolt in the recent war cannot be laid at Sir Richard's door. He has been repeatedly and violently assailed by a section of the Indian press for allowing weapons to fall into the hands of the enemy, and for refusing help, as he had advisedly refused it before, at a moment when the Khyber was threatened by the tribesmen. But from the vexatious charges of party journalists he was triumphantly cleared by Lord Lansdowne, in his great speech on the Indian Frontier Question, delivered in Parliament at the close of the campaign. Sir Richard Udney was with General Lockhart during the greater part of the war, and was the spokesman of the English Government at a durbar where the rebel chiefs assembled to hear the conditions of peace propounded to them in Pushtu. He was honoured by his old University with the degree of LL.D. in August 1878. He retired in 1878. He is married to Alicia, daughter of the late Samuel Tomkins, jun., banker, of Lombard Street. Address: East Indian United Service Club, 16 St. James's Square, S.W.

UNWIN, Professor William Cawthorne, B.Sc., F.R.S., M.I.C.E., Hon. M.I.M.E., was born at Coggeshall, in Essex, in 1838, and is the son of William Jordan Unwin, LL.D., for many years Principal of Homerton College. He was educated at the City of London School, and was apprenticed in the works of Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester, 1855 to 1862. Professor Unwin was Instructor at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, 1868-72; Professor of Mechanical and Hydraulic Engineering, Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill, 1872-84; and since that time has been Professor of Engineering, Central Institution of the City and Guilds Institute at South Kensington. He is the author of "Wrought-Iron Bridges and Roofs," 1869; "The Elements of Machine Design," 1877 (11th edit., 1890-91); "The Testing of Materials of Construction," 1888; and of various papers in the Proceedings of Society. In 1893 he delivered the Howard lectures on the "Development and Transmission of Power from Central Stations." In 1895 he delivered the Forrest lecture on "The Experimental Study of Steam-Engines," and in 1896 the Watt lecture on the life of Hirn. He was Secretary of the International Commission on the Utilisation of Niagara. Address: 7 Palace Gate Mansions, Kensington.

UZÈS, Duchesse d', Marie Adrienne Anne Clémentine de Rochechouart-Mortemart, was born in Paris in 1848, and in 1867 married the Duc d'Uzès, who died in 1878. Her husband was a great supporter of Legitimist principles, and his widow continued his policy, putting her immense fortune at the service of the monarchical party. She came greatly into notice during the Bonlangist agitation, 1888-90, by spending vast sums of money in the electoral campaign. She was reported to have given three millions of francs to aid in the election of a candidate who would be brought back to power. She is in favour of the Legitimist cause. Duchesse is an aristocratic title. Having been at the Salon of 1875, she was elected to the Académie des Beaux-Arts. She could not be elected to the Académie des Sciences, and was elected to the Académie des Lettres in 1895. Her election to the Académie des Lettres was the result of the vote of the Académie des Lettres in 1894, "Le Voyage en Italie." Her Paris address is 10, rue de la Chapelle, Paris.

VAMBÉRY, Professor born at Duna-Szerdahely in 1832, of very poor parents, and at an early age obliged to leave the paternal roof and seek his own support. He studied in the University of Pest, and devoted his life to the study of foreign languages. To complete his knowledge of the languages he went to the East, and up his residence in Constantinople, and many parts of the East in the disguise of a doctor. He is known to Europeans as the author of the Travels and Adventures of a Doctor from Bokhara to Samarcand, 1867. His "Travels and Adventures" appeared in London in 1867, and he was appointed Professor of Oriental Languages at the University of Pest. In his town he has for many years written frequent letters to the English papers, warning them of the designs of Russia. He has once visited England on a mission, the last occasion being in 1875, when he was in London at the same time as Lessar, whose diplomacy he sought to counteract. His more recent works are "Djagatai Language," 1867; his "Wanderings and Adventures in Persia," 1867; "Sketches of Asia," 1868; "Uigur Linguistics," 1870; "History of Bokhara from the Earliest Period down to the Present," 1873; "Central Asia and the Russian Frontier Question," 1875; "Sketches of Man and Manners in Oriental Countries," 1875; "Etymological Dictionary of the Tartar Languages," 1875; "Civilisation of the Turco-Tatars," 1879; "Sheibaniname," and "The Struggle for India," 1885. An account of his "Life and Adventures" written by himself, with a des of England, was published in 1889. Since that date he has published "The Story of Hungary," 1877, many essays in English, German, Hungarian, and has written an introduction to the "Voyages and Adventures of Ferdinand Mendez Pinto," in the Adelphi Series, 1891. Address: The University of Pesth.

VANBRUGH, Irene, was born at Exeter, Devon, and is the youngest daughter of the Rev. Preb. R. H. Barnes. She was educated first at the High School, Exeter, and then at a finishing school.

After a season with Miss Sarah Barrett, she joined Mr. Toole's company in November 1889, and played the leading part in the repertory in London, in the production of "The Tempter," "Six Characters in Search of an Author," and in the production of "Ibsen's Ghost," and in his production of "The Importance of Being Earnest," which ran for eighteen months.

In September 1893 she went to America for "The Tempter," "Six Characters in Search of an Author," and leaving Mr. Tree in November 1894, went to the St. James's Theatre to play "The Masqueraders." This was followed by "The Importance of Being Earnest" by "Guy Domville," and by re-appearing in "The Tempter."

When her brother-in-law, Mr. Arthur Bourchier, in September 1895, took the management of the Royalty Theatre, she joined his company.

Miss Irene Vanbrugh joined his company to its great advantage, for it was she who played in "Kitty Clive" and "The Liars," as well as in "The Chili Widows."

After touring with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Bourchier in America, she returned to the Criterion to create the part of the Countess in "The Liars." Jan. 6, 1896, was the first night of Miss Irene Vanbrugh's appearance in the title-rôle of "The Countess of the Wells" at the Court Theatre.

Permanent address: 190 Earl's Court Road, S.W.

VANBRUGH, Violet (Mrs. Arthur Bourchier), was born at St. Mary Church, Exeter, Devon, and is the eldest daughter of the Rev. Preb. Reginald H. Barnes.

After a season with Miss Sarah Barrett, she joined Mr. Toole's London company, and as Lady Anne Babbicombe in "The Butler" made an instant success.

She and Mrs. Kendal opened at the Court Theatre, and Miss Vanbrugh went to them for "The Leaker Sex," and stayed with them during their London work and for two American tours, playing through secondary parts to Mrs. Kendal. In "The Leaker Sex" was produced at the Court Theatre.

Miss Vanbrugh added greatly to her success by the charming fashion in which she represented Anne Boleyn.

After much good work at Daly's she was married to Mr. Arthur Bourchier on Dec. 9, 1895, and a few months later the young couple started in management on their own account at the Royalty Theatre, where they produced "The Chili Widow" and "The Queen's Proctor." These two plays they took to America in November 1896, and upon their return they played a short season at the Strand. In May 1898 Miss Vanbrugh created the title-rôle in George Bancroft's play "Teresa," and subsequently played in Mrs. Craigie's "Ambassador" at the St. James's. Permanent address: 190 Earl's Court Road, S.W.

VANDAM, Albert Dresden, the "Englishman in Paris," author and journalist, was born in London on March 1843, and is the eldest son of Mark Vandam, District Commissioner for the Dutch State Lotteries. He received a private education in Paris, and in 1866, during the war between Prussia and Austria, began his career as a publicist. During the war of 1870 he was correspondent to American papers. After the war he settled in London, and during ten years published "Amours of Great Men," "An Everyday Heroine," an adaptation, &c. In 1882 he became the Globe correspondent in Paris, which he left in 1887, finally settling in London, and only leaving it on special journalistic missions to France, Germany, &c. The book with which he achieved fame was his "Englishman in Paris," published in 1892, and followed in 1894 by "My Paris Note-Book." Both these works display a penetrating knowledge of French affairs under the Second Empire and in the early days of the Republic. Among his other works we may mention: "The Story of the Coup d'État," 1884; "Behind the Scenes of the Comédie Française," 1889 (both translations); "Undercurrents of the Second Empire," 1896, &c. He ranks with the late Philip Hamerton and with Miss Betham-Edwards and Mr. J. E. C. Bodley as one of those who speak with especial authority on French men, manners, and affairs. Address: 47A Manchester Street, Manchester Square, W.

VAN DYKE, Henry, D.D., LL.D., American author and preacher, was born at Germantown, Pa., Nov. 10, 1852. He graduated at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute in 1869, Princeton College in 1873, Princeton Theological Seminary in 1877, and studied for two years at the University of Berlin. In 1879 he was called to the United Congregational Church of Newport, R.I., and in 1882 to the Brick Presbyterian Church, one of the historic churches of New York City. In 1889 he in 1875, and at University College, Oxford. Here he obtained a first class in the Honour School of Natural Science (1878), and was Public Examiner in the same school in 1887-90. He was appointed Demonstrator and Lecturer at the University Museum, Oxford, in 1887. Lecturer of Queen's College in 1891, and Tutor to the Delegacy of the Non-Collegiate Students in 1890. He has published numerous memoirs on theoretical, physical, and applied chemistry in the Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Journals of the Chemical Society, and of the Society of Chemical Industry, and the Philosophical Magazine. The most important are the following: "The Rate of Decomposition of Ammonium Nitrate," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1883; "Some Sulphur Compounds of Calcium," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1885; "The Lime Process for Purification of Coal Gas," Jour. Soc. Chem. Indust., 1885; "The Conditions of Evolution of Gases from Homogeneous Liquids," Phil. Trans., 1888; "The Conditions of Chemical Change between Nitric Acid and Metals," Phil. Trans., 1891; "The Variations of Electromotive Force of Cells consisting of certain Metals and Nitric Acid" (with G. J. Burch), Phil. Trans., 1891; "The Inertness of Quicklime," Jour. Chem. Soc., 1893-94; and "The Phases and Conditions of Chemical Change," Phil. Mag., 1891. He is joint-translator of the "Handbook of the Polariscope." Address: 22 Norham Road, Oxford.

VENN, John, Sc.D., F.R.S., is the eldest son of the late Rev. Henry Venn, Prebendary of St. Paul's, who was for many years Hon. Sec. of the Church Missionary Society. He was born at Hull, Aug. 4, 1834, and was educated at the Grammar School, Highgate, the Islington Proprietary School, and afterwards at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1857, and obtained a Fellowship in the same year. He took orders in 1858, and for some years held curacies at Cheshunt, Herts, and Mortlake, Surrey; but later (in 1883) he abandoned the clerical calling. Since 1862 he has resided mostly at Cambridge, being Lecturer in Moral Sciences at Caius College, and frequently an Examiner in the same subjects in the university. In 1869 he held the office of Hulsean Lecturer. In 1883 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is the author of "Logic of Chance," 1866, 1876, 1888; "Symbolic Logic," 1880 (2nd edit., 1894); "Empirical Logic," 1889; and various papers in scientific and other periodicals. In 1891 he edited for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society the Register of Baptisms, &c., in St. Michael's Parish Church, Cambridge, between the years 1588-1887. He married Susanna Carterie, daughter of Rev. C. W. Edmonstone, 3 St. Peter's Terrace, Cambridge.

VENOSTA, Marco, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, born in January 1841, followed a diplomatic career, and was Minister for Foreign Affairs when Italian troops entered Rome. When Italian unity was complete, he fell, and during the years Depretis, Cairoli, and Crispien were entirely forgotten. He was Signor Giolitti's agent and arbitrator in the Balkans. In 1896, after Cassafium resigned in consequence of his actions in the Greek Balkans, Venosta returned to the office, exactly twenty years after he resigned in May 1876, in differences of opinion with Sir. On the new Cabinet of Giolitti being formed in May 1902, he resumed his old post, succeeding Giolitti. His long experience of office and his great moderation gave him greater prestige than that by any other Foreign Minister.

VERBEEK, Reinier Dirck, engineer, was born at Maastricht, Sept. 5, 1841, studied at the University of Liège, Belgium, and at the Academies of Clausthal and Freiberg, Saxony, whence he received a degree of Mining Engineer. He is the author of several papers on the laws of the Netherlands, the mineral wealth of the Indies, and was the first to draw attention to the occurrence of gold in quantities in the Isles of Borneo. For many years he was in the Dutch East Indies, became Superintendent of Survey of Sumatra, and published important maps and reports on the Krakatau eruption of 1883, naturally selected by the Government to be the head of the commission to examine and report upon the eruption; the report, and series of maps, sections, and drawings subsequently issued, are proof of his energy and ability. He is Ingénieur-en-chef des Ponts et Chaussées, Chevalier du Lion Neerlandais.

VERDI, Giuseppe, composer, from very humble parents, being a peasant in the village of Roncole, near Busseto, was

9, 1814. He early showed love for music, and his first position was obtained from one organist of the little church position to which Verdi himself when only ten years old. His father, a musical amateur, M. Verini, seeing the boy's genius, gave him a position in his business and secured him every opportunity to follow his natural bent. Verdi remained at Busseto under Ferdinando Provenzale, cathedral organist, until he was sixteen, when he gained a Scholarship at the Conservatory, where he studied for some time, and was appointed organist in 1833, on the death of the previous organist. Verdi was unsuccessful in his application for the post of cathedral organist, which was offered vacant by the decease of the previous organist. He stayed at Busseto for five years, and published his first opera, Oberto, Conte di San Bonifacio, which was produced by the impresario, Merelli, at the La Scala Theatre, Milan. This was followed by the comic opera, Un Giorno a Reims, "Nabucco," and I Lombardi alla prima Massima, the last of which gained a great popularity and laid the first basis of his fame. It is curious to note that while at Milan, he was refused admission to the Conservatoire by an old organist on the ground that "you are not made for music." His best-known operas are "Nabucodonosor," founded on Victor Hugo's Nabucodonosor (produced in 1844 at the Fenice Theatre); the "Due Foscari," "Macbeth," the "Masnadieri" (the "Robbers" of Schiller), "Rigoletto," the "Trovatore," "La Traviata," "Un Ballo in Maschera" (produced in London in 1861), and "Aida" (performed at the Royal Theatre, Covent Garden, in 1867). "Macbeth," written for her theatre, and produced in 1847, in which Verdi, as heroine, proved a success, though it has since been rarely performed. The "Trovatore" and "Macbeth" have had great success, not only in Germany, France, and England, but also Verdi's more recent operas, "Il Giovane d'Arco," in 1868; "Il Destino," in 1869; and "Aida," produced at the Scala, Milan, in 1871. "Requiem Mass," a requiem in honour of his great countryman, was first performed in the Theatre Marco at Milan, May 23, 1874, and Verdi was elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts in 1861, and in 1871 he was appointed in order to assume the post of organist by the Italian Minister of Education, for the improvement of the Italian Musical Academy, which Verdi, who is a member of the Legion of Honour, was elected corresponding member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, Dec. 10, 1859; was made Grand Cross of the Russian Order of St. Stanislaus in 1862; Foreign Associate of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, June 15, 1864; and Grand Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy in 1872, in which year the Viceroy of Egypt conferred on him the Order of Osmanieh. King Victor Emmanuel, by decree dated Nov. 22, 1874, created Signor Verdi an Italian Senator. In May 1875 he was nominated a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and the Italian Minister at Paris was charged to present him with the insignia of the order, accompanied by a flattering letter from the Duc Decazes. In the same year he was decorated with the Cross of Commander and Star of the Austrian Order of Franz-Joseph. Signor Verdi completed, in 1878, a new opera in five acts, entitled "Montezuma," which was given for the first time at La Scala, Milan. This was followed in 1886 by "Otello," which was reproduced at the Lyceum in London, in 1889. In 1893, "Falstaff," a new opera, was produced at Milan, and received with great enthusiasm. At its reproduction in Paris in 1894 Verdi himself was present. On his return from Paris to his native country, in April 1880, he received the Order of the Crown of Italy. Verdi is carrying to completion a great scheme of his own for providing a Home of Rest for old Italian artists of all classes. The building, which is situated outside the Gate Magenta, at Milan, was designed by Signor Camille Boilo, a brother of Arigo, the librettist of "Otello" and "Falstaff," and is estimated to cost £16,000. The Home will provide shelter for 100 inmates—60 men and 40 women—but the present arrangement is that the Casa di Riposo, as it is to be named, will not be opened until Verdi's death, although the Home will be ready for occupation shortly. The civilised world hopes that the master will long be spared to it, and his recovery from a most serious illness in 1897 gives renewed hope. In May 1898 Maestro Verdi received from the Philharmonic Choral Society of Berlin a magnificent palette of flowers, decorated with ribbons of the German and Italian colours. The affectionate inscription ran: "To the ever-young and incomparably great master, in sign of admiration and homage — The Philharmonic Choral Society of Berlin, May 1898." Address: Genoa.

VERESTCHAGIN, Vassili, Russian painter, was born at Tcherepovets, in Novgorod, Oct. 26, 1842. He entered the navy in 1859, but soon gave it up to enter the Academy of Fine Arts at St. Petersburg. In 1831 he obtained a silver medal with his "Lovers of Penelope slain by Ulysses," which he afterwards destroyed as being too classical. He then went to Paris and studied under Gérôme, and in 1866 exhibited "Ulysses' men singing the Psalms" at the Salon. He took part in General Kaufmann's Central Asian Expedition in 1871, went to India in 1874, and fought and sketched throughout the Russo-Turkish war of 1878. His pictures of the Turkistan campaign were acquired by the Moscow Museum, and in 1880 he exhibited a large number of his war pictures in Paris, and seven years later in London. In 1885 his exceedingly realistic pictures from the New Testament were removed from the Kunstlerhaus in Vienna by order of the Archbishop. He published his "Autobiographical Sketches" in 1887. His great aim in his work is to paint war as he actually sees it. He revisited London in 1888, when he was exhibiting a series of pictures on Napoleon's Russian campaign of 1812.

VERNE, Jules, a popular French writer, born at Nantes, Feb. 8, 1828, was educated in his native town, and afterwards studied law in Paris. Turning his attention to dramatic literature, he wrote a comedy in verse entitled "Les Pailles Rompues," which was performed at the Gymnase in 1850. This was followed by "Onze Jours de Siège," a three-act comedy, brought out at the Vaudeville, and "L'Oncle d'Amérique," and by several comic operas. But his fame rests chiefly on his scientific romances, the first of which appeared in 1863, under the title of "Cinq Semaines en Ballon." Its success led the author to produce many similar works, now numbering nearly sixty, of which the following have been translated into English and other languages, even into Japanese and Arabic: "Five Weeks in a Balloon: a Voyage of Exploration and Discovery in Central Africa," 1870 (2nd edit., 1874); "A Journey to the Centre of the Earth," 1872; "Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea," 1873; "Meridiano: the Adventures of Three Englishmen and Three Russians in South Africa," 1873; "From the Earth to the Moon Direct in Ninety-Seven Hours Twenty Minutes; and a Trip Round It," 1873; "The Fur Country: or, Seventy Degrees North Latitude," 1874; "Around the World in Eighty Days," 1874; "A Floating City, and the Blockade Runners," 1874; "The English at the North Pole," "Dr. Ox's Experiment," 1874; "Adventures of Captain Hatteras," "The Mysterious Island," "The Survivors of the Chancellor," 1875; "Michael Strogoff, the Courier of the Czar," 1876; "The Child of the Cavern," "Hector Servadac; or, the Career of a Comet," "The Boy Captain," "Vert," 1882; "Kaiser," "L'Ecole de Saint-Maurice," 1884; "Le Billet de Loterie," 1884; "Le Chemin de Fer," 1884; "Vacances," 1885; "Fanny," 1886; "Mathias Sarrasin," 1886; "César Castan," 1886; "The North Pole," "Bombardac," and "Le Patillas," 1887; "Antifer," 1887; "Fanny," 1887. He lives at Amiens.

VERNON-HARCOURT, George, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., Reader in Chemistry at Oxford, was born in London, 1834, and is the eldest son of Frederick E. Vernon-Harcourt, sister of the 1st Lord of the daughter of Admiral. His youngest brother is Professor Engineering at University Street. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first class in Natural Science and a Senior Studentship in 1859. He was Science Lecturer at St. Mary's Church from 1871 to 1872. Lee's Reader in Chemistry, Vice-President of the Chemical Society, and Gas Referee for the Metropolitan Gas Company. He has published, in co-operation with Madan, of Queen's, "Experimental Chemistry," 1882; "Grange, Oxford, &c.; and

VERTUE, The Right Rev. D.D., F.S.A., Roman Catholic, Portsmouth, was born in London, 1826. He was ordained by Cardinal Patrizi in 1848, previously studied at St. Edmund's, Hertfordshire, and the University of Rome. Poplar was the secretary of his missionary labours, and in 1848 he was the Apostolic Nuncio at Rome, as his Secretary of States and Canada. On the acknowledgment of his services he was made Chamberlain of Her Majesty, April 18, 1854. Monsignor Vertue was appointed to Aldershot Camp on the 18th of 1855; but he was appointed to the Forces, June 24, 1855, and held for twenty-seven years. He was mentioned in General Order for distinguished and meritorious services in the epidemic of yellow fever, and was promoted from the third class of army chaplain to the second class, 1865, for the services he rendered. Monsignor Vertue was six was re-appointed Chamberlain to Pope Leo XIII., April 1879, appointed the first Bishop of the Apostolic brief of June 13, 1879, consecrated by Cardinal Manning on June 25. He has edited a "Prayer Book for the Army," 1859; and a revised edition of Challoner's "Meditations," 1860, and has contributed various articles to the Dublin Review and the Quarterly Review. He represented the English hierarchy at the Centennial celebration at the World's Fair, United States, in 1889. He is a member of the Society of Antiquaries, the Archaeological Institute and various learned societies. Address:

Lermann, actor, was born in 1829, in Philadelphia, U.S., his parents, his father being a German, a distinguished merchant. He was intended for the law, and took the degrees of B.A. and M.A. at the University of London.

Having a passion for the theatre, he came to England, and obtained the patronage of Mr. Charles Kean, and acted in the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, his London début at the Theatre under Mr. Charles Kean. Having visited America professionally in 1857, he returned a year later, and after several engagements, appeared at the Theatre, London (1859), as Hamlet, Othello, Shylock, King Lear, &c. During Mr. Phelps's management of Sadler's Wells (1860) Mr. Lermann played as Orlando, Mark Antony, Cassio. In 1864 they produced Marston's comedy of "The Taming of the Shrew," at the Princess's Theatre, London. In 1870 he alternated Othello with Hamlet, under Mr. Phelps. Later he played in G. Wills's romantic drama "The Queen's Theatre." In 1871 he played with Phelps, Toole, at the Gaiety Theatre. At 1876, he played Macbeth for the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition at the Crystal Palace, and played Oedipus at Colonus, which was assigned to Mr. Vezin. In 1876, he made his first appearance at Haymarket, in Mr. W. S. Gilbert's "Dan'l Druce." After playing the part of Druce 106 times, he created the character of De Taldé in an English comedy, "The Danicheffs," produced at the Theatre, 1877. In 1878, at the Court Theatre, Dr. W. G. Wills's drama of "The Vicar of Wakefield" was played, at that time Mr. Vezin has acted both in London and the provinces. Address: 10 Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

VIARDOT - GARCIA, Madame Michelle Pauline, vocalist, daughter of the great tenor, Emmanuel Garcia, and sister of the lamented Madame Malibran, born in Paris, July 18, 1821, at four years of age spoke four languages, and at seven was able to play the pianoforte accompaniments for the pupils to whom her father gave lessons. After sharing the family migrations, first to England, and afterwards to the United States, she returned to Europe in 1828, and her education was continued at Brussels. In consequence of her manual facility on the piano, she became one of Liszt's most accomplished pupils. Her father died in 1832 before her voice was formed, and her sister being constantly absent on professional tours, her studies, which included various branches of the arts, drawing and painting, as well as music and singing, were directed by her own tastes and the counsels of her mother. She made her first appearance in London at the Opera-House in 1839, in the character of Desdemona. Her voice, like that of her sister, combined the twofold register of soprano and contralto, embracing a compass of three octaves. At the close of the season she joined the Italian operatic company, then acting at the Odéon, in Paris, and was equally successful. In 1841 she reappeared in England, singing with Mario in Cimarosa's opera "Gli Orazi e i Curiazi." Her next engagement was at Vienna; and Rubini, on forming an operatic corps for St. Petersburg, selected her for his prima donna. She afterwards appeared at Berlin, and when Jenny Lind quitted the German Opera, Madame Viardot-Garcia proved herself an able successor in the repertoire, which she greatly extended. Her name is associated with the first performances of "Les Huguenots," in which she took the part of Valentine, and of "Le Prophète," in which she performed the part of Fides, an exquisite impersonation. Madame Viardot is also celebrated for her singing of Spanish songs. She retired from the stage in 1862, and devotes herself to composition. In April 1840 she was married to M. Louis Viardot, Director of the Paris Italian Opera (he died in May 1883).

VIAUD, Louis Marie Julien, known as "Pierre Loti," French naval officer and man of letters, was born at Rochefort on Jan. 14, 1850, and is descended from an old noble Huguenot family long settled in that district. He went to school in his native town, entered the navy in 1867, and went several voyages in the Pacific.

remained. His speech on election contained an attack upon the realism of Zola. As an author he is indeed the very antithesis of that writer, and his books, with their dreamy and melancholy beauty of style and subject, mark a revival of the spirit of romanticism and mysticism in French literature. His works, which have run through many editions, are: "Aziyade" (Stamboul, 1876-77, 1879; "Rarahu," a Polynesian idyll, 1880, reprinted under the title of "Mariage de Loti," in 1889; "Le Roman d'un Spahi," 1881; "Fleurs d'Ennui," a volume containing some of his finest work, such as "Pasquaia Ivanovitch," "Mon Frère Yves," of which there is an English translation, 1883; "Les Trois Dames de la Kasbah," 1884; "Pêcheur d'Islande," also translated into English, and into German by the author's friend, Carmen Sylva, and awarded the Prix Vitet by the Academy, 1886; "Madame Chrysanthème," 1887; "Propos d'Exil," 1887; "Japonneries d'Automne," 1889; "Au Maroc," 1890; "Le Roman d'un Enfant," an autobiography, 1890; "Le Livre de la Pitié et de la Mort," 1891; "Fantôme d'Orient," a mstadt (H.R.H. died Dec. 14, 1842). H.R.H. Prince Alfred Ernest Augustus, born Aug. 6, 1844, created Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, May 24, 1866, married, Jan.

Grand-Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, daughter of the late Emperor Nicholas I., H.R.H. Princess Helena of Schleswig-Holstein, born May 26, 1846, married, May 5, 1866, to Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein; 6, H.R.H. Princess Louise of Alberta, born March 14, 1848, married to the Marquis of Lorne, May 1, 1871; 7, H.R.H. Prince Arthur of Connaught, Duke of Connaught, born May 1, 1850, married, March 1, 1873, to Princess Louise Margaret of Schleswig-Holstein; 8, H.R.H. Prince Leopold George Duncan of Albany, born April 7, 1851, married, April 2, 1882, to the Princess Alice Augusta, daughter of the Duke of Gloucester and Pyrmont (H.R.H. Prince of Wales, 1842-1892); and 9, H.R.H. Princess Mary Victoria Feodore, born May 1, 1857, married July 23, 1885, to Prince Maurice of Battenberg. Her Majesty's grief which her Majesty felt at the loss of her mother, the Queen Adelaide, in 1825, the loss of the Prince Consort, to the great sorrow of the kingdom, Dec. 14 in the same year, her Majesty's intense sorrow at the loss of her mother, although it has in a measure disqualified her from appearing at court ceremonies, and on her the habits of a life of seclusion, has, however, never prevented her to interfere with the performance of her important duties as a sovereign. Neither has it checked the natural anxious interest which she has ever since her accession steadfastly manifested for the welfare of her people. It is a natural pride to her subjects, and it tends in no small degree to soothe her Majesty's abiding grief, that she rules over her own vast dominions, but in the eyes of the civilised world, her Majesty is never mentioned save in terms of sympathy, affection, and respect as a woman and as a queen. It would require much more space than our limits allow to give even a brief outline of the events of her Majesty's reign, therefore merely glance at salient features. On succeeding to the throne, her Majesty found the Conservative parties nearly divided in the House of Commons. Lord Melbourne and his colleagues continued in office until September 1841, when they retired to their increasing unpopularity; mainly from a want of financial ability, or at least of financial success, they were obliged to give place to the late Sir Robert Peel. Although he was pledged to maintain the Corn Laws, he found himself compelled, in 1845, to acquiesce in their repeal, which was carried into effect at his instance in 1846. The effect of this change in Sir Robert Peel's policy caused a disruption in the Conservative party, and led to the accession to power of Lord John Russell, who was succeeded in January 1852 by the Earl of Derby. In the following December the Conservative party, beaten on their own budget, resigned, and gave place to Lord Aberdeen and the Coalition Cabinet, which, in February 1855, was dismissed for having mismanaged the Russian war. It was succeeded by Lord Palmerston's first administration, which was defeated on the Conspiracy to Murder Bill, in March 1858, and Lord Derby held power for the second time, until June 1859, when Lord Palmerston formed his second Cabinet. On his death, October 1865, the Ministry was remodelled, Earl Russell assuming the post of Premier. His Ministry having decided upon introducing a Reform Bill, the duty of conducting it through the House of Commons devolved upon Mr. Gladstone. Having been defeated on an important clause in June 1866, Ministers resigned. Lord Derby formed his third administration, and during the session of 1867 carried a Reform Bill, thereby settling a question which had long been a stumbling-block impeding the progress of legislation. The Conservatives being placed in a minority at the general election of 1868, Mr. Disraeli resigned office, and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Mr. Gladstone. The chief events of Mr. Gladstone's administration were the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the passing of the Irish Land Act and the Elementary Education Act, the abolition of purchase in the army, the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington respecting the Alabama Claims, and the passing of the Ballot Act. At the general election of February 1874 the Conservatives again came into power, and a new administration was formed by Mr. Disraeli, afterwards Lord Beaconsfield. By virtue of the power conferred by an Act of Parliament passed in the previous session, her Majesty was, on Jan. 1, 1877, proclaimed Empress of India, by the Governor-General, at the durbar at Delhi, before an imperial assemblage of all the governors, lieutenant-governors, heads of Government, princes, chiefs, and nobles of India. On the defeat of the Conservatives at the general election of 1880 Mr. Gladstone formed another Liberal administration, which continued in office until June 1885, when it was succeeded by a Conservative Government under Lord Salisbury. After the general election of November 1885 the Liberals again came into power, and the spring of 1886 was devoted by Mr. Gladstone to the consideration of the Irish question. His Home Rule Bill, however, met with so much opposition that the Government decided to appeal to the country, and the result of the general election of July 1886 was an immense Conservative majority. Lord Salisbury's second Government came into power on Aug. 3, 1886. In April 1882 an attempt on the Queen's life was made at Windsor by one Roderick Maclean, who after trial was ordered to be confined during her Majesty's pleasure. "The Early Days of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," compiled under the direction of her Majesty, by Lieut.-General the Hon. C. Grey, was published in July 1867, and was followed, in 1869, by "Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands"; and in 1874 by the first volume of Mr. (now Sir) Theodore Martin's "Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort," of which the fifth and concluding volume appeared in 1880. In 1885 her Majesty published a second volume, entitled "More Leaves from the Journal of our life in the Highlands." In 1887 her Majesty celebrated the Jubilee of her accession to the throne. A Thanksgiving Service was held in Westminster Abbey, and was attended by her Majesty and all the Royal Family, the Indian Princes, the King of Denmark, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King of Saxony, the King of the Hellenes, the Crown Prince of Austria, the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Infante Don Antonio of Spain, Prince Ludwig of Baden, the Crown Prince of Greece, the Grand-Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the Queen of Hawaii, with her attendants in cloth of gold, and representatives from every nation upon earth. The service in the Abbey was conducted by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury in the presence of 10,000 spectators. Since the Jubilee of 1887 her Majesty has travelled abroad more than formerly, and has generously patronised music and the drama, on many occasions summoning eminent singers and actors to perform before her at Windsor and even at Balmoral. She has paid several visits to Florence or to such places in the south of France as Cimiez, and has made prolonged stays there. In 1892 the Queen addressed a letter to the nation thanking her subjects for the sympathy they had shown her at the time of the Duke of Clarence's death. Lord Salisbury's Government went out of office in 1892, and the Queen summoned Mr. Gladstone to form a Cabinet. In March 1894, on Mr. Gladstone's retirement from office Lord Salisbury became Premier, and some time later entered in the Ministry. On her visit to Florence in 1894 she was met by Prince Coburg, on April 18, at the residence of the Grand-Duke of Hesse and Rhine, and by Princess Melita of Coburg. She spent some time at the residence, but did not again reach Windsor. Later her Majesty met with a very enthusiastic reception in March 1895, on May 21, she opened the Jubilee Exhibition in person. The Rosebery and the Grosvenor were of very short duration. On May 21, 1895, the Government was divided upon a question of the supply of money to the army. The following day Lord Rosebery placed his resignation in the hands of the Queen, by which it was accepted. Lord Salisbury then formed an Administration, and duly formed an Administration, as ultimately consisting of no less than thirteen members, of whom fifteen were Conservatives and four Unionists. Mr. George Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, was appointed Chamberlain Secretary for the Admiralty. One notable event of the year 1895 was the disappearance of the illustrious Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone from Parliamentary life. In 1896 her Majesty was visited by the Shah of Persia, and also by the Shah of Afghanistan, Khan, son of the Ameer. In January 1896 Prince Herbert died, having contracted the disease at Ashanti, where he went with the punitive expedition against King Prempeh. The Queen was much attached to the Prince, and his death very keenly. In April 1896 the Order of Knighthood was instituted, and long been considered deserving of some special mark of distinction to reward British subjects who had rendered important or personal services to the Sovereign, and the Queen Victoria's Order for Merit. Its peculiar feature is its division into three classes, the first two of which are knighthood upon the recipient's name, the Queen invited to Windsor, and Honorable Artillery, and the third to Boston. She held a review of the troops in the Park, and they were to march past fully armed with their colours. The gracious manner in which the Queen received them, and the welcome which London gave to the occasion, gave great satisfaction in America, and this time much indignation in England by the cruel massacre of the Armenians which was going on in the Minor, with the alleged support of the Sultan of Turkey. Many in America advocated independent action.

try to put a stop to these in the hope of ameliorating of the sufferers, the Queen graph letter to the Sultan special effort in respect of a difficulty. In September and Czarina of Russia paid Queen at Balmoral, staying a Lord Salisbury was summoned by an audience with the many political questions, particularly to Eastern affairs, &c. In May 1897 the Queen left Sheffield on her way to London after opening the new Town Hall. Messrs. Armstrong's works had viewed the rolling of a steel plate as armour for a battleship. Her Majesty completed the work of her occupation of the English throne by establishing the longest reign of a monarch in the history of modern Europe. It may be said that the whole world participated in the Jubilee celebrations which brought honour to the event. The Jubilee Commemorative Service was begun on Saturday, with a military tattoo attended by the troops of the garrison. The same day a route march of 100 miles was made by Imperial troops. The force was composed of representatives from all the regiments, numbered 2500 officers and men. On the anniversary of the Queen's birth, being upon a Sunday, the day was spent throughout the Empire by giving services. Her Majesty visited Windsor and attended divine service at George's Chapel, the congregation limited to the Court and members of the Royal Family staying on. At St. Paul's Cathedral an immense gathering, including the Prince of Wales and every Royal personage in London, foreign Ambassadors, Bishops, fifty peers, two hundred knights and members of the Bar, representatives from all the learned societies and bodies. Services of a special kind were held in all the principal churches of every denomination. On Monday afternoon the Queen received a reception, which was followed by a banquet. In the House of Commons a congratulatory address was presented by the Marquis of Salisbury and Lord Kimberley, and in the House of Lords a similar address was moved by Lord Salisbury and Sir William Harcourt. Honours announced on that day included peerages and fifteen appointments to the Privy Council, including Colonial Premiers. Many promotions in the various branches of the civil and military service were made. On Tuesday, Diamond Jubilee Day, the principal event of the celebration took place. An immense procession was organised, comprising representatives of all the naval and military forces of the Empire. It started from Buckingham Palace, followed by the Queen at 10 A.M. The morning was fine, and dense crowds of spectators lined the whole route, and thanks to the admirable arrangements of the police, the day passed off without any serious accident. The novelty and variety of the uniforms, many of which had never been seen before in London, gave a picturesque charm to the procession. The vociferous cheering all along the line left no doubt as to the loyal sentiments of the people, the greeting of the royal carriages being especially enthusiastic. Her Majesty's carriage was preceded by one containing the royal grandchildren, and this was followed by a conclave of forty Princes on horseback, mostly representatives of foreign Kings and Governors. Just before leaving the Palace the Queen telegraphed to all parts of her dominions the message, "From my heart I thank my beloved people. May God bless them." Upon the arrival of the Royal Procession at Temple Bar, the Lord Mayor, Sir F. Faudel-Phillips, and his deputation, on foot and bareheaded, met the Queen and presented to her the historic sword. Her Majesty touched the hilt, and commanded the Lord Mayor to lead the way into the City. He thereupon mounted his horse and preceded the Queen, bareheaded and holding the sword aloft. The great episode of the procession was the Thanksgiving Service outside St. Paul's Cathedral. An immense concourse was assembled there, including dignitaries of the Church in their robes, and City officials. A short service was held, and the benediction pronounced by the Archbishop of Canterbury; then the whole assembly joined in singing the Old Hundredth. On Wednesday the Queen received the addresses, and afterwards the Members of both Houses of Parliament at Buckingham Palace. It was remarked at the time that the restrained simplicity of the Parliamentary procession, headed by the Speaker in his ancient coach, did honour to the best traditions of English Parliamentaryism. Thursday was marked at Windsor by the reception of the Lords of the Admiralty and of the Admirals of the foreign warships lying at Spithead. In the evening a carnival procession was held, and the Castle illuminated. In London interest chiefly centred in the Jubilee dinners given in fifty-six different districts to over 300,000 people. The scheme had been promoted at the suggestion of the Princess of Wales. Among the subscribers were Sir Thomas Lipton, who gave £25,000, and the Australian Colonies, which sent 20,000 carcasses of mutton. Friday was a day of social royal gatherings. The naval review, which took place on Saturday, June 26, as an historical event was the most striking and important of the national celebrations in connection with the Diamond Jubilee. Between Portsmouth and the Isle of Wight was moored the most magnificent and efficient fleet that has ever been got together. The fleet was moored in five lines, each line extending nearly five miles, and with regard to the ships assembled it is important to point out that no single vessel had been recalled from a foreign station to swell the numbers at Spithead. The Prince of Wales, representing the Queen, at 2 P.M. began a procession between the lines, and following him in various vessels were Indian Princes, Colonial Premiers, foreign Ambassadors, and Members of both Houses of Parliament. As the Prince passed each ship a royal salute was fired, the whole fleet cheering lustily when the royal yacht anchored. The illumination of the fleet at night was a perfectly unique sight. At a given signal the whole fleet instantaneously burst into light, every ship being illuminated with lines of incandescent lamps, tracing out the hulls, barbettes, bridges, funnels, and masts. Just before midnight the Prince again passed down the lines, and again received a royal salute. The firing of the guns, combined with the illumination, made an exceedingly grand spectacle. The Queen afterwards expressed to Admiral Sir Nowell Salmon, O.C., the Commander-in-Chief, her entire satisfaction with the management of the review. The number of vessels of all kinds was 150, manned by nearly 40,000 officers and men, and representing in money value a sum of £38,000,000 sterling. Not only our own countrymen, but foreigners of all nations were present, and expressed their admiration in no measured terms, and, taken as an exhibition of British naval power, the review made a deep impression upon the mind of Europe. In conclusion it may be mentioned that her Majesty has outlived all those members of the House of Lords who sat there at her accession, and all the members of her first House of Commons. She has seen six Archbishops of Canterbury, the same number at York, five Bishops of London, and every Episcopal See vacated at least twice. Eleven Lord Chancellors have received the Great Seal at her hands. Ten Prime Ministers and six Speakers of the House of Commons have taken office during her reign, and she has survived every member of her first Privy Council. To find in the closing years of her long reign her people stronger, her Empire more united, and her own person more vigorous, than ever, is a happier fate than that of any of her predecessors.

VILERS, Charles Marie de, was born in 1827 in a family. He began his career at the age of sixteen, and at twenty-six received the Legion of Honour. He entered the Civil Service, was Préfet at Joigny and promoted in 1877 to the Ministry of the Colonies. He was Minister of the Colonies in 1882. For his gallantry in the Algerian campaign he was promoted to the rank of Admiral. In 1879, the Cabinet determined to appoint him as Governor to Cochinchina, and in June of that year he was appointed Plenipotentiary to the Government of the colony. He made himself extremely popular and introduced many improvements, repressing a serious insurrection and constructing the railway of the colony. In 1882 he became Minister of the Navy, and with respect to the appointment of an officer, and was recalled to France. He lived quietly until 1887, when Freycinet was desirous of making war with Madagascar to acquire a treaty with that country, which was duly ratified by the French Government, but would need delicate handling to carry out. In the spring of 1888 M. de Vilers was appointed Minister for Antananarivo as Plenipotentiary, being fully aware of the nature of his task. The Minister, a clever and astute diplomat, soon found he had a stubborn antagonist to deal with, and as the treaty had been very vague, the Résident-General insisted on the rights of his country. The French Government requiring funds for indemnity due to France, entered into communication with an English syndicate for a loan of francs. The French Envoy insisted on his right, and insisted on his appeal to the French for the loan. After discussion the Prime Minister accepted the offer made by the Comptoir d'Escompte at Paris, which advanced francs at 6 per cent., to be repaid in 25 years by levies on the certain selected seaports. The question that arose between M. de Vilers and the Malagasy Government of a mission to Europe entrusted to an Englishman in the service of the Hovas. This was General Willoughby, M. de Vilers desired to see banished from the island, and he had at last the satisfaction of seeing him embarked for Europe. M. de Vilers openly displayed his feeling towards the English element at Antananarivo, especially against the Hovas, who are very influential.

From the first he kept entirely aloof from the British colony, and endeavoured to prevent British enterprise from getting a footing in the island. The Governor-General refused to recognise the authority of the Hova Government to grant capitulations to representatives of foreign powers, alleging that the French Envoy had the right to do so. In 1887 Lord Dufferin, the British Consul, took notice of this requirement of M. de Vilers and applied for it to the Hovas' Government. Many interviews took place, but at last the French Envoy broke off all negotiations, hauled down the tricolour, and ordered his escort of marines to Tamatave and prepared to leave the capital with his staff. The Prime Minister, foreseeing the consequences of his leaving, immediately sent for the French Plenipotentiary, and complied with all his demands; but it is nevertheless a question which will always be mooted, and has more than once nearly caused a rupture between the two countries. In 1888 M. de Vilers returned to France, and was promoted to be Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. He went back to Madagascar, but a few months later resigned his appointment there, and was elected Deputy for Shanghai in September 1889. In 1890 he was sent to negotiate the convention with Siam, and successfully achieved his mission. In September 1894 he was once more appointed Envoy to settle affairs in Madagascar, and reached Antananarivo in October. With his accustomed promptitude he at once started thither on his mission. On Tuesday, October 1st, he, M. Rauchot, and the Vicomte de Ségur, had an audience of the Governor and the Prime Minister, and opened negotiations and put forward demands which, if acceded to, would have the effect of constituting Madagascar a French colony.

VILLARI, Pasquale, Italian writer, born at Naples in 1827, and having studied for the law, in 1847 became involved in revolutionary politics, for which he was imprisoned. He then retired, and devoted himself to historical research. In 1859 he was appointed Professor of History at the University of Pisa, and in 1862 came to London as the Italian delegate to the Universal Exhibition. On his return he was promoted to be Professor of History at Florence. In 1884 he became Minister of Public Instruction in the Rudini Cabinet, and has distinguished himself by his reforms in education. His best-known works are: "Vita di Savonarola," Florence, 1859, "Antiche Legende e Tradizioni che illustrano la Divina Commedia," 1865; "Insegnamento della Storia," 1869; "Nicolo Machiaveli e suoi Tempi," 1877. Most of these have been translated into English by his wife, née Linda White. His last book has been "The First Two Centuries of Florentine History," published in 1895.

VILLIERS, Frederic, was born in London on April 23, 1852. He is the son of Henry Villiers, by Caroline, daughter of Thomas Bradley, and was educated in the north of France at Guines. Afterwards he studied in the Schools of Art at South Kensington, and became a student of the Royal Academy in 1870. In 1876, as special artist and correspondent to the Graphic, he went through the Servian campaign with Mr. Archibald Forbes. He was with the armies of the Timok, Drina, Eber, and with Tcherniaieff on the Morava; was decorated with the Order of the Takova, and received a war medal for this campaign, being recalled in November to Constantinople. He then travelled in Roumelia and Bulgaria, examined the Turkish army, re-crossed the Servian lines, and returned with the Turkish troops to Constantinople. Having been ordered to go into Russia, he, in January, started for Kisheniff, and saw the mobilisation of the Russian troops in Bessarabia. Mr. Villiers returned to England in February 1887. The day on which war was declared between Turkey and Russia, he started for Bucharest, where he joined Mr. Forbes and was present at all the chief engagements. When the armistice was declared, he was the only English correspondent who accompanied the Russian army to enter Constantinople, and was present at San Stefano when peace was signed and announced to the Russian Guard by the Grand-Duke Nicholas on Sunday, March 3, 1878. Mr. Villiers received the Cross for the passage of the Danube, and the war medal. In June of that year he went to Malta, and was present at the review of the Indian Contingent by the Duke of Cambridge. In November he left England for Afghanistan. He went through the first part of that campaign till the signing of the Treaty of Gandamak; then left for Australia; was at the opening of the Sydney Exhibition; travelled through New Zealand; and returned to England via San Francisco and New York, thus making a journey round the world. Mr. Villiers left England for Egypt immediately on receipt of the news of the massacres at Alexandria, of June 11, 1882; was on H.M.S. Concor during the bombardment of that city; and landed with the marines. Afterwards he followed the army to Ismailia; was at the first fight at Tel-el-Mahouta, and was with the Highland Brigade during the night march and subsequent attack on Tel-el-Kebir. Mr. Villiers remained in Cairo till the trial and banishment of Arabi and his confederates. He received for this campaign the order and rosette of the Medjidieh, and the Egyptian war medal from the hands of the Khedive. In May 1883 he was one of the English correspondents invited to attend the coronation of the Czar at Moscow; received silver medal and badge. In February 1884 Mr. Villiers left for Suakin to join General Graham, who had gone to avenge the defeat of General Baker at the first battle of Teb. Mr. Villiers was present at the Arab defeat at the second battle of Teb. On March 13 he was at the battle of Tamai, and subsequently, as special correspondent of the Daily News, accompanied Admiral Sir W. Hewett on his mission to the court of King John of Abyssinia. In the autumn of 1884 and the spring of 1885, Mr. Villiers was with the Nile Expedition for the relief of Khartoum, being present at the battle of Abu-Klea and the advance upon Metemneh. Returning to England, he started almost at once for Ireland, where he witnessed the manoeuvres of the Evolutionary Squadron in Bantry Bay, in June 1885. A period of rest followed, and in November 1885 Mr. Villiers started for Serbia, and was with the Serbian forces at all the chief encounters with the Bulgarians. An armistice being declared, he started on his homeward journey. At Venice he found a telegram from the proprietors of the Graphic, telling him to go to Burma. He accomplished the journey from Venice to Rangoon in one month—arriving just in time to accompany Lord Dufferin on his journey up the Irawaddy to Mandalay. When Lord Dufferin returned to India, Mr. Villiers left for Constantinople, to await the development of events in the Balkan Peninsula. He eventually joined the Greek army, and was in Athens during the blockade of the Greek ports. As a peaceful solution of the Turko-Greek question took place, Mr. Villiers returned to England. Since 1887 he has been lecturing in England, the United States, and Canada, on his varied experiences during the last decade. In August 1889 Mr. Villiers was invited by the Governor-General of Canada to accompany his Excellency on his official tour through the Atlantic. He was the Canadian principal of the F. Japanese illustrated at the bar vance on I place. He turning tour his paper. He repres war betw and visite joined the Omdurman and Illust campaign. Sept. 2, 18 service. (

1872; gave numerous lectures on Armies at the Royal United Institution between 1872 and 1878; Commissioner of the Daily in 1877; and assembled a force upon the requirements of the force, leading to considerable results in 1878, and obtained like results in 1887. He resigned, March 4, 1878, to reorganise the System of the Metropolitan Police, and with absolute authority the criminal administration. He resigned in 1884, in order to be a Member of Parliament, and was appointed Commandant of the Queen's West-India Regiment, which post he still held, the regiment being one of the best in the country, and selected for the inspection of the German Emperor in 1891. In 1888 he was elected Metropolitan Board of Works for Hanover Square, and in 1889, 1892, was returned unopposed for his constituency to the London Council. In 1895 he was returned for a contest, but resigned in 1896. He is a magistrate for Westminster, and Berkshire, a tenant for London, and has travelled over the whole world. In 1885 he was elected as Conservative Member for the Central Division of Sheffield by a majority of 1149, and by 1195 in 1886, 1892, and again unopposed in 1896. In Parliament he is identified with the Social Movement, United Empire League, British Labour Questions, for the Probation of First Offenders, the first nine years of which have saved under it from imprisonment £100,000 was not spent in gaol, the Saving Life at Sea, the Schools, the appointment of a Trustee, and prohibiting the sale of Prison-Made Goods are due to him. In 1886 he was created a Knight of the Bath, and K.C.M.G. In 1899, for his services as representative at the late Anarchist Congress in Rome. In 1895 he was elected to the Council of the National Conservative Associations, and appointed to the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition of 1900. He founded the United Empire League, and has since acted as its secretary, succeeding in 1897 in the ratification of the treaties of 1862 and 1864, and was knighted by the Emperor of Germany in 1896. He is also a knight of the German Crown and of the Kingdom of Italy. His published works are: Reports upon the Prussian Army," 1871; "Elementary Military Geography, Reconnoitring and Sketching," 1872; "Russia's Advance Eastward," 1873; "The Law of Criticism and Libel," 1876; "The Improvement of the Volunteer Force," 1878; "Procédure d'Extradition," 1880; and "A Police Code and Manual of Criminal Law," which has gone through ten editions, and has been adopted as the text book of all English-speaking police. Sir Howard Vincent married, in 1882, Ethel Gwendoline, daughter and co-heiress of Geo. Moffatt, Esq., M.P., of Goodrich Court, Herefordshire, a great traveller and authoress of "40,000 Miles over Land and Water," "Newfoundland to Cochin-China," and "China to Peru over the Andes," by whom he has an only daughter, Vera Howard, born 1883. Addresses: 1 Grosvenor Square, S.W.; and Athenæum.

VINCENT, Sir Edgar, K.C.M.G., youngest brother of the above, was born at Slinfold, Sussex, on Aug. 19, 1857. He was educated at Eton, and passed an examination for the appointment of Student Dragoman at Constantinople, in October 1877, but did not take up the appointment. He was subsequently appointed 2nd Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards (1877), and resigned (1882). In May 1880 he was appointed Private Secretary to Lord E. Fitzmaurice, Commissioner for Eastern Roumelia; and in June 1881, Assistant to Her Majesty's Commissioner for the evacuation of the territory ceded to Greece by Turkey. He was appointed British, Belgian, and Dutch Representative on the Council of the Ottoman Public Debt at Constantinople, March 1882; President of the Council of Ottoman Public Debt at Constantinople, March 13, 1883; and Financial Adviser to the Egyptian Government, Nov. 4, 1883. He has received the first class of the Medjidieh, and was made a K.C.M.G. in August 1887. It was mainly owing to his efforts that Egyptian finance was restored to prosperity. When the financial difficulties of Egypt were overcome, Sir Edgar Vincent resigned the post of Financial Adviser and was appointed Governor of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, a post he held till 1897. As evidence of the progress of Egyptian credit during the six years that he was Financial Adviser, it may be stated that the selling value of Egyptian securities in 1883 was £76,251,678, and in 1889 had risen to £103,362,730, this result having been obtained with a diminution of the charges of the Egyptian Government and of the taxpayer. While in Egypt, Sir Edgar Vincent undertook and carried out with success a reform of the Egyptian currency. Since his appointment, Turkey has regularly paid

"Syrie, Palestine, Mount Athos," 1876; "Histoires Orientales," 1879; "Le Fils de Pierre le Grand," 1884; "Histoires d'Hiver," 1885; "Le Roman Russe," 1886; "Souvenirs et Visions," 1887; "Remarques sur l'Exposition du Centenaire," 1889. Vicomte Melchior de Vogue was elected a Member of the Académie Française in November 1888. He was promoted Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1879.

VOULES, Horace St. George, journalist and editor of Truth, was born at Windsor on April 23, 1844, and is the son of Charles Stuart Voules, solicitor, Windsor. He was educated at private schools at Brighton and Eastbourne. He began life in 1864 in the printing trade at Cassell, Petter, & Galpin's, and in 1868 originated for them the Echo, the earliest halfpenny evening paper. When, in 1875, the paper was sold to the late Albert Grant, he continued as editor and manager of the same till it passed into the hands of its present proprietor, Mr. Passmore Edwards, in 1876. In that year he arranged with Mr. Labouchere to start Truth, which was issued in January 1877. He has remained in this post ever since, and has been sole editor for several years. He at one time, during a year or more, assisted in the reconstruction of the Pall Mall Gazette, from which Mr. Greenwood had then seceded. Addresses: Truth Office, Carteret Street, S.W.; and Uplands, Brighton.

VOYSEY, The Rev. Charles, B.A., was born in London, March 18, 1828, being the youngest son of the late Mr. Annesley Voysey, architect. He was educated partly by private tuition, partly at Stockwell Grammar School, and afterwards at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851. From 1852 to 1859 he held the curacy of Hessle, near Hull, after which he was curate (under the Crown) of Craigton, Jamaica, for fifteen months. In 1861 he was appointed curate of Great Yarmouth, but in the same year was transferred to St. Mark's, Whitechapel. Being ejected from that curacy in consequence of a sermon against endless punishment, he was recommended by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait) to the curacy of the well-known Victoria Dock parish, under the Rev. H. Boyd, Vicar. After six months' service there he was invited by the patron and Vicar of Healaugh, Yorkshire, to accept the curacy of that parish, and at the expiration of six months the Vicar resigned and presented Mr. Voysey to the benefice (1864). Mr. Voysey began his career as a religious reformer by his sermon entitled "Is God in the Bible about Our Faith strictly true?" This was in 1865, by "The Sunday School," which first appeared in 1865, and was continued through 1866 to the present time for the issue. The opinions expressed were denounced as heretical by orthodox parties in the Anglican Church, and eventually in the proceedings were instituted by the bishop of York's secretary, Mr. Voysey. The case was heard in the Chancery of the Minster, Dec. 1, 1868, when it was pronounced against Mr. Voysey, appeal, confirmed by the committee of the Privy Council, sentenced the appellant to be living, and to pay the costs. In October of that year Mr. Voysey holding Theistic services in London, first at St. George's, at Langham Hall, and since at the Theistic Church, 8, Piccadilly. The religious movement which he is associated with is the "Voysey Establishment" in 1880, at his own request, and congregation enrolled into the "Theistic Church" been properly settled by a Trust Deed. For the first of his preaching in London, his sermons were published with Eastern Post, and frequently in papers in England, in America, and India. Every sermon was preached since October 1865, printed and circulated in the world. The issue is 120,000, the total number of sermons reprints, is over 1,250,000. The Theistic Church in two years has cost over £40,000, and a of £2653 has been collected. Mr. Voysey is the author of a work, entitled "The Mystery of Death, and Sin"; and he issued what may be regarded as works on the religion which entitled "Theism, or The Common Sense" and "The Science"; also an important book, entitled "The Testimony of the Four Gospels concerning Jesus Christ." By the aid of a munificent friend Mr. Voysey has been able to purchase over 14,000 volumes of his Public Free Libraries, College, &c., besides many thousands of pamphlets and sermons. Address: Annesley Lodge, Platt's Lane, N.W.

WAKLEY, Thomas Henry, F.R.C.S., joint-editor of the Lancet, is the son of the famous founder of that journal, the late Thomas Wakley, Coroner for West Middlesex and M.P. for Finsbury. He was born in London on March 20, 1821, and was educated by a private tutor, at University College Hospital, and in Paris. He was formerly Surgeon and Lecturer on Surgery at the Royal Free Hospital, and is now Consulting Surgeon to the same. From 1848 to 1883 he was in practice as a Consulting Surgeon. He has been the author of many scientific papers in his own journal, and of several articles, including that on ford Street, Strand, W.C., &c.

WALDECK - ROUSSEAU, Pierre Marie, French politician and lawyer, was born on Dec. 2, 1846, and is the son of the famous politician who died in 1882. Like his father, he chose the profession of the law, and in 1879 was elected a member of the Chamber of Deputies for Rennes. There he sat among the United Republicans, and introduced a Bill for the Reform of the Judiciary. Re-elected in 1881, he became Minister of the Interior in Gambetta's Cabinet of that year, and endeavoured to keep the administration of the country free from political interference. He resigned with the rest of the Ministry in January 1882, but accepted the same post in Jules Ferry's Cabinet of 1883, and retained it until March 1885. In the next year he became a member of the Paris Bar, and there acquired a great success, being engaged in all the famous cases, notably in the defence of De Lesseps in the Panama scandals of 1893. So great was his work that in 1889 he did not come forward as a Parliamentary candidate, although he was elected a Senator a few years later. He had completely severed himself from political life, when at the fall of the Dupuy Cabinet in June 1899 over the riot at the Auteuil racecourse, President Loubet (a fellow-lawyer) appealed to M. Waldeck-Rousseau to form a Coalition Cabinet to see the Dreyfus rehabilitation through. After a first failure, he succeeded in his task, having the former Imperialist, General de Gallifet, as Minister of War, and the Socialist, M. Millerand, as Minister of Commerce. Despite these heterogeneous ingredients, he succeeded in gaining a vote of confidence in the House, and speedily dissolved the Chambers in July, having the support of all right-thinking Frenchmen. His Paris address is 35 Rue de l'Université.

WALDEGRAVE, Earl of, The Right Hon. William Frederick Waldegrave, is the son of Viscount Chewton, was born on March 2, 1851, and succeeded his grandfather as 9th Earl in 1859. He was educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. He held the appointment of Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1886 to 1892, and from 1895 to 1896, and he has been Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard since 1896. He was Second Conservative Whip in the House of Lords from 1889 to 1896, and since the latter year he has acted as Chief Conservative Whip. Lord Waldegrave is Vice-Chairman of the National Rifle Association, and is an Hon. Major of the London Rifle Brigade. He married, in 1874, Mary Dorothea, daughter of the 1st Earl Selborne. Address: 20 Bryanston Square, W.

WALDERSEE, General late Chief of the General Staff of the Prussian army, was born in 1824. He entered the army in 1850, and served through the war of 1870-71. He became Quartermaster-General as Deputy Chief of the General Staff on the behalf of the aged Count von Moltke, whose resignation he succeeded in procuring. Count Waldersee married a lady who had received the title of Countess Maria von Noer, as the daughter of the late Prince Frederick of Holstein.

WALDSTEIN, Charles Ph.D., L.H.D., Knight of the Order of the Redeemer, and of the Saxon Order, Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, Slade Professor of Archaeology, and University Reader in Classical Archaeology, Member of the Imperial Archaeological Institutes of Berlin, Athens, &c., was born in New York, March 30, 1856, and is the surviving son of Henry Waldstein of that city. Educated at New York, then for three years to 1870, travelling in Europe, and at schools in Switzerland, many, he in 1870 prepared for the University, New York, at the Mr. Leggett in that city. He entered the University there at the age of fifteen. He went in 1873 to the University of Berlin, where he took Ph.D. in Prehistoric Archaeology, and Political Science, and thence went to study at the Museum, and since then has resided in England. In 1878 he gave a series of lectures on Greek Art in the British Museum, under the patronage of the University of London, published a volume "Balance of Emotion and Intellect," contributed articles to the Nineteenth Century. Early in 1880 he was invited to a course of lectures on Greek Art at the University of Cambridge: was Lecturer there, and in 1883 accepted the newly-created Chair of Classical Archaeology, which he still holds. The same year he succeeded Professor Colvin as Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, a post he held for six years; he gave it up in order to take the ship of the American Archaeological Expedition at Athens; the University of Cambridge granting him leave of absence for winter months. He resigned the ship of the American School in 1892, since then living at Cambridge, he was made Slade Professor of

5. He is one of the leading excavators of the day, having directed extensive excavations in Greece at the ancient Eretria, where he has found the tomb of Aristotle, and at the Heraeum. These works are still on, having been directed by him the last three years. He has been in recognition of his work, honorary member of several foreign learned bodies, Knight Commander of the Hellenic Order of the Redeemer, and K.C. of the Ernestine Order. Besides "The Art of Emotion and Intellect," published in London in 1878, he has written essays on the Art of Phidias," Cambridge, 1885; "Catalogue of Casts in the Museum of Classical Archaeology," London, 1885; "Excavations at the Hereion of Argos," London, 1892; "The Work of the Parthenon," London, 1894; "The Art of Art," London, 1895. Most of his works have appeared in American editions. He has published about thirty-six articles in the special Archaeological Journal of England, America, and the Continent, and has been a frequent contributor to the Nineteenth Century, Harper's, Century Magazine. Permanent Lecturer, King's College, Cambridge.

LES, H.R.H. Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.B., I., G.C.M.G., &c., Heir-Apparent to the British Crown, eldest son of her Majesty Queen Victoria and the late Prince Consort, was born at Buckingham Palace, November 9, 1841. He was created Prince of Wales and Duke of Cornwall, by patent under the Great Seal, on December the 4th of the same year. His early education was entrusted to the Rev. Henry M. Birch, Rector of Christ Church; Mr. Gibbs, Barrister-at-law; Mr. C. F. Tarver; and Mr. H. W. Parnell. Having studied for a session at Christ Church, he entered Christ Church, Oxford, where he attended the public lectures for a year, and afterwards resided for three or four terms at Cambridge for the purpose. His Royal Highness visited most of the summer of 1860 in a tour to Canada, subsequently making a tour through the United States, where he was most enthusiastically received. In October 1858 he was appointed a brevet Lieutenant in the Army, and in June 1861 he was sent to the Camp at the Curragh, Kildare, to undergo a course of military training. He was promoted General in November 1865 and attained the rank of Field-Marshal in May 1875. His Royal Highness was also Colonel-in-Chief of the Household Cavalry, the 10th Hussars, and the 1st Brigade; Captain-General of the 1st Artillery Company, and Colonel of the Gordon Highlanders. In the German

Army he holds the rank of Field-Marshal, and is also Colonel-in-Chief of the 5th Pomeranian Blücher Hussars. In the Austrian Army he is Colonel of the 12th Regiment of Hussars. Accompanied by Dean Stanley the Prince, in 1862, travelled on the Continent, visiting Germany and Italy; thence he journeyed through Egypt and Syria, to Jerusalem. Upon his return he was introduced at the Privy Council, and took his seat in the House of Lords as Duke of Cornwall. His Royal Highness is also Prince of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, Duke of Saxony, Duke of Rothesay, Earl of Garriock, Earl of Dublin, Baron of Renfrew, Lord of the Isles, and Great Steward of Scotland. He is also patron of twenty-six livings, chiefly as owner of the Duchy of Cornwall. On March 10, 1863, His Royal Highness married, at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, Princess Alexandra, eldest daughter of the King of Denmark, and was at once granted an income of £40,000 per annum, exclusive of the revenues of his Duchy, making an aggregate of about £100,000 a year. At the same time he relinquished his right to the succession of the throne of Saxe-Coburg Gotha in favour of his younger brothers, by a formal act. In the following year he visited Denmark, Sweden, and Russia. Between the years 1864 and 1870 the Prince visited many parts of the United Kingdom, opening Exhibitions, laying foundation stones, and performing other civic functions, being always most warmly received. He went to Egypt for the second time in 1869, and examined the Suez Canal, afterwards departing for Constantinople, Sebastopol, and Athens. In July 1870 His Royal Highness inaugurated the Thames Embankment, and opened the Workmen's International Exhibition at Islington. Towards the close of 1871 the Prince was attacked with typhoid fever, and for some weeks his life was despaired of; but he slowly recovered, and was able to take part in the memorable Thanksgiving Service in St. Paul's Cathedral, on February 27, 1872. He was elected Grand-Master of the Freemasons in England, in succession to the Marquis of Ripon, in 1874, and during April of the following year was admitted to the office at a Lodge held in the Albert Hall. In May 1875 he was installed at the Freemasons' Hall, as First Principal of the Royal Arch Freemasons. About this time Parliament voted over £100,000 to enable His Royal Highness to visit India. He left Dover on October 11, and landed at Cairo on the 25th, and invested Mohammed Tewfik, son of the Khedive, with the Order of the Star of India. He arrived at Bombay in November, and then proceeded to Ceylon and Calcutta. After visiting all the principal cities of the Empire, the Prince arrived in London in May 1876. He brought home with him about 500 animals, and these he presented to the Zoological Society's Gardens. In the following July he reviewed 30,000 Volunteers in Hyde Park. His Royal Highness was appointed President of the British Commissioners at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, in which he took a great interest. He attended the Court festivities held in Berlin in March 1883, to celebrate the "Silver Wedding" of the Crown Prince of Germany with the Princess Royal of England. During 1885, in company with the Princess of Wales, he made a tour through Ireland, visiting Dublin, Killarney, and Limerick, and everywhere received a most enthusiastic welcome. The Prince and Princess celebrated their "Silver Wedding" in 1888. Their Royal Highnesses and their two sons visited the Paris Exhibition of 1889, the Prince at that time evincing an active interest in the promotion of the series of Exhibitions which were being held in South Kensington. The establishment of the Imperial Institute was, in a large measure, due to the efforts of the Prince, and in spite of a good deal of opposition and hostile criticism, he succeeded in obtaining a royal warrant for its constitution. In May 1891 His Royal Highness was made a grandfather by the birth of the Duchess of Fife's daughter. He was appointed a Member of the Poor-Law Commission in 1893, and attended its sittings with great assiduity. During the summers of 1893 and 1894 the Prince raced his yacht, the Britannia, in most of the chief regattas round the coast, and secured many victories. He was present, in April 1894, at the wedding of Princess Victoria Melita at Coburg; and also, with the Princess of Wales, attended the marriage of the late Czar's daughter at St. Petersburg. In the following July the Prince and Princess were present at the Welsh Eisteddfod, on which occasion the Princess was admitted a Bard. During the autumn, accompanied by the Duke of York, he hastened to join the Russian Imperial family, on the occasion of the decease of the late Czar; and the Prince, by his courteous attention to Russian etiquette and constant attendance at the prolonged funeral ceremonies, gained the affection of the Russians to a marked degree. During 1896 His Royal Highness won most of the principal turf races, securing the Derby at Epsom with his horse "Persimmon," amid a scene of unparalleled enthusiasm. In June of the same year he was installed as Chancellor of the new University of Wales, and in the following month attended the marriage, at Buckingham Palace, of his second daughter, the Princess Maud, to Prince Charles of Denmark. In the Jubilee year, 1897, was the inauguration of the Imperial Hospital Fund. His Royal Highness appealed to the public for contributions, and was enabled to raise a sum of £1,000,000, which was devoted to the permanent support of the London Hospitals, and to enable them to free themselves from debt. Before the year, he received nearly £1,000,000, including £500,000 which were promised as additional contributions. The Prince took a great interest in the Jubilee celebrations, and on the 20th, attended divine service at St. Paul's Cathedral, at which he was the principal personage in London. On the following day he was appointed Master and Principal Knight of the Bath. In the month of June 20, the Prince and Princess of Wales, in the Queen's carriage, attended the review of the Prince and Princess of Wales, with a very distinguished escort, were the guests of the Lord Mansfield House. The most important event in connection with the Jubilee was the Naval Review, at which the Prince represented the Queen. The fleet, moored in the Solent, opposite Portsmouth, consisted of ships of all classes, in number and variety never before seen, and was considered the greatest ever got together. The Prince and Princess of Wales, in the Victoria, accompanied by a great number of people in other vessels, steamed to the review, and reviewed the fleet, receiving a Royal salute as he passed. He afterwards held a reception on the Royal yacht, to which all the officers taking part in the review, as the English admirals, were invited. Admiral Sir Northbrook, Commander-in-Chief, made a signal during the reception, ordered by the Prince of Wales, sending the Queen, to express his satisfaction with the magnificent display at Spithead, and the manner in which all the orders were carried out; at his request the mainbrace to be sprung. In 1898, while on a visit to Baron de Rothschild at Waddesdon, the Prince had the misfortune to fall, fracturing his leg. Sir William MacCormac and other members of the medical profession were called in, and operative interference was decided against. A mode of enforcing prolonged rest was adopted, and though many weeks elapsed, His Royal Highness could not be expected that no permanent injury would be obtained as a result of the accident.

always taken a great interest in the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, and was Executive President of the Queen in May 1886. He has been elected the Royal College of Physicians President of St. Bartholomew's Hospital and of the Society of the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford that have conferred upon him the degree of LL.D., and Oxford that The Prince for several years has been a Bencher of the Middle Temple and also an Elder Brother of the Society. He is President of the Royal Agricultural Society. In the Royal Navy he holds the rank of Rear Admiral of the Fleet, and Captain in the Royal Naval Reserve.

S, Her Royal Highness Princess Alice, the Princess of, is the daughter of Christian IX., King of Denmark, was born at Copenhagen, Dec. 1, 1844, was married at Windsor on Nov. 25, 1863, to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and has three children: Albert Victor Christian Prince of Clarence and Avondale, born at Marlborough Lodge, near Windsor, Dec. 24, died January 1892, within a few weeks after his betrothal to his fiancée May of Teck; George Ernest Albert, born at Marlborough House, June 3, 1865, married Mary of Teck, July 1893; Louise Alexandra Dagmar (Duchess of Fife) at Marlborough House, Feb. 20, 1862, married to the Duke of Fife in July 1889. Princess Alexandra Olga Marie, born at Marlborough House, July 6, 1868; Maud Marie Victoria, born at Marlborough House, Nov. 26, 1869, married to the second son of the Crown Prince of Prussia, in July 1896, and Prince Alfred who died shortly after his birth, June 6, 1871. Her Royal Highness accompanied the Prince of Wales to Russia on the occasion of the death of Alexander III., and spent a prolonged stay with her sister-in-law, with whom she attended the funeral ceremonies at St. Petersburg. The late Queen of Denmark's illness took her to her native land in the summer of 1898, and, with the Princess of Wales, she was subsequently present at the funeral ceremonies of the late Queen, to whom she had been tenderly attached. The Princess is well known for her interest in all kinds of benevolent enterprises, and as an accomplished linguist, holding the degree of Hon. D.Litt. as a collector of old lace and china, and a devotee of country life in Lincolnshire, where her dairy is a source of much pleasure.

WALFORD, Mrs. Lucy Bethia, novelist, was born on April 17, 1845, and is the youngest daughter of the second son of Sir James Colquhoun of Colquhoun and Luss, 10th baronet of the name, and brother of the unfortunate Sir James who was drowned in Loch Lomond, within sight of his own door, some years ago. Her mother was the daughter of E. Fuller-Maitland, Esq., of Stanstead, Essex, and this lady—as is little known—was the writer of the principal portion of those verses, now in every hymn-book, and usually attributed to H. Kirke White—

Of these Kirke White wrote only the first six lines, and the poem was finished by Miss Frances Fuller-Maitland, then only in her sixteenth year. From both parents Mrs. Walford thus inherits literary tastes, as her father's comprehensive sporting work, “The Moor and the Loch,” lately gone into its seventh edition, is considered a classic among lovers of the rod and the gun. It was not until four years after her marriage, in 1869, to Mr. Alfred Saunders Walford, that Mrs. Walford published “Mr. Smith,” her first serious attempt. It was sent anonymously to Mr. John Blackwood, and by him was accepted and published at once. Mr. Blackwood, on the success of “Mr. Smith,” urged Mrs. Walford to write for the “Maga” (Blackwood's Magazine), and the result was a series of short tales, beginning with “Nan: a Summer Scene,” which has lately been brought out under this heading in book form. They comprehended “Bee or Beatrix,” “Lady Adelaide,” “Fashion and Fancy,” “Eleanor: a Tale of Non-Performers,” and “Mattie: the History of an Evening,” all which made their first appearance in Blackwood. “Pauline,” Mrs. Walford's first Blackwood serial novel, ran its course in 1877; “Cousins,” her third novel, was published by the same firm in 1879. “Troublesome Daughters” followed in 1880; “The Baby's Grandmother” was the Blackwood serial in 1885; and “A Stiff-Necked Generation” completed its course in the same pages in 1888. Alongside of these, her larger works, Mrs. Walford wrote a series of biographical essays for Blackwood, which were afterwards published under the title of “Four Biographies from Blackwood”; “Dick Netherby,” a one-volume tale of humble Scottish life, for Good Words, in 1881; and “Dinah's Son,” on the same lines, for Life and Work, also in 1881; “The History of a Week” formed the Christmas number of the Graphic in 1885; and all these have also been republished in book form. Other novelettes are: "A Mere Child," "The Havoc of a Smile," "A Sage of Sixteen," "A Pinch of Experience," "The One Good Guest," and two collections of short magazine stories. In 1891 Mrs. Walford's novel, "The Mischief of Monica," formed the serial for the year in Longmans' Magazine, and was re-published by the same firm, who have brought out several succeeding editions. Messrs. Longman also published in the autumn of 1892 "Twelve English Authoresses," being a collection of biographical essays written for Far and Near, an American monthly, and contemporary with this appeared a small volume of "Stories for Grown-up Children," illustrated by T. Pym. This was followed by "A Question of Penmanship," 1893. In 1894 "The Matchmaker" ran as a serial for the year in Longmans' Magazine. "Ploughed" appeared in 1894; "A Bubble," and "Frederick," 1895; "Successors to the Title," 1896; "Iva Kildare," 1897; "The Intruders," and "The Archdeacon," 1898. In 1869 Mrs. Walford was married to Mr. Alfred Saunders Walford, of Cranbrooke Hall, Essex, where she resides.

WALLACE, Alfred Russel, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., born at Usk, Monmouthshire, Jan. 8, 1823, of Scottish descent, was educated at the Grammar School, Hertford, and articulated with an elder brother as land surveyor and architect, but gave up that profession in order to travel and study nature. In 1848 he visited the Amazon with Mr. Bates. Returning in 1852, he published his "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro," and a small volume on "Palm-Trees of the Amazon and their Uses." In 1854 he visited the Malay Islands, where he remained eight years. He published "The Malay Archipelago," 2 vols., in 1869 (10th edit., in one volume, 1890), and a volume of essays entitled "Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection" in 1870, as well as a large number of papers in the publications of the Linnean, Zoological, Ethnological, Anthropological, and Entomological Societies. In 1868 he was awarded the Royal Medal of the Royal Society, and in 1870 the Gold Medal of the Société de Géographie of Paris. In 1875 he printed a small volume "On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism." His elaborate work, in two volumes, on "The Geographical Distribution of Animals," was published in 1876, in which year he was President of the Biological Section at the meeting of the British Association at Glasgow. In 1878 he published a volume on "Tropical Nature," containing, besides a description of the equatorial climate and aspects of nature, his views on the colours of natural objects, on sexual selection, the geographical distribution of animals and plants,

Member of the National Assembly in 1849, but resigned in 1850. After the fall of the Empire he was again returned, as a moderate Conservative, by the Department of the Nord, but he joined the Lavergne group on the question of the Constitutional Laws. To his moderation and vigour was due the definite establishment of the Republic—indeed, he is still commonly called Father of the Republic—and accordingly M. Buffet, on forming his administration in March 1875, nominated him Minister of Public Instruction. It was he who proposed the clauses which first gave constitutional shape to the Republic. M. Wallon is a Member of the Institute, and Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. He was a candidate for the seat in the French Academy that had been vacated by M. Claude Bernard, but M. Renan defeated him by 19 to 15 (June 13, 1878). He was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1886. M. Wallon is a sound historian. His chief works are "Richard II."; "Histoire de l'Esclavage dans l'Antiquité" (3 vols.); "Jeanne d'Arc"; "St. Louis et son Temps" (2 vols.); "De l'Autorité de l'Evangile" (1 vol.); "Le Tribunal Révolutionnaire de Paris" (6 vols.), 1886; "La Révolution du 31 Mai et le Fédéralisme en 1793" (2 vols.); "Les Représentants du Peuple en Mission et la Justice Révolutionnaire dans les Départements en l'An II." (5 vols.), 1889-90. Paris address: 25 Quai de Conti.

In 1878 resident of the College, of Dr. Russell, in 1880, animously chosen Presi- bishops. Acting for the s of the College, he gave ne "Bessborough" Com- 0, explaining the refusal tenants of the Duke of the "Leinster Lease," ent under which it was tenants to "contract of the protection of the . By this evidence on hich had resulted in the ishops by the Duke of lsh exercised no little aming of the Land Act , through his exertions, s appointed to inquire of the Queen's Colleges some time he was a al University of Ireland, he resigned in protest nation arrangements of that body. He became a Member of the Chapter of Dublin on the accession of Cardinal MacCabe to the archiepiscopal throne. On the death of that prelate in February 1885, Dr. Walsh was elected Vicar Capitular; and in the June of the same year he was appointed to the See of Dublin. Since his appointment as Archbishop he has taken an active interest in the leading questions of the day in Ireland. He has warmly advocated an amicable settlement of the Land Question through the establishment of some system of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between landlords and tenants. He was a witness before the Parnell Special Commission of 1888-89, in connection with which he also had a prominent part in the exposure of the forger, Richard Pigott. He gave important evidence before the Evicted Tenants Commission in 1892, in the course of which he insisted strongly on the injurious bearing of our present monometallic system of currency upon the agricultural interest, especially in Ireland under the land legislation of 1881 and subsequent years. But the principal subject of Dr. Walsh's public action, outside the strictly religious sphere, has been the Irish education question: he has made many suggestions for its settlement, the keynote of his numerous letters and addresses on the subject being a demand for equality between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Ireland in the matter of educational endowments and privileges. He has also taken an active part in the settlement of trade disputes and strikes in Dublin: he opportunely intervened in the great strike on the Great Southern and Western Railway in 1890, and secured its amicable settlement, a public service for which he has received the honorary freedom of the city of Cork. His interest in the cause of temperance is warm and practical: in addition to a widespread temperance organisation in the diocese of Dublin, there has been created under his guidance a similar organisation throughout all the dioceses of his archiepiscopal province. In addition to his appointment as a member of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland, a position which he resigned in 1884, he has been appointed by successive Governments to various public positions of importance; since 1892 he has been a Commissioner of Intermediate Education in Ireland; since 1893, a Commissioner of Charitable Donations and Bequests; and since 1895, a Commissioner of National Education in Ireland. As a Commissioner of National Education he has laboured strenuously to effect a reform of the existing system of primary education in Ireland by the introduction of various suitable forms of manual training, and other changes in the direction of practical usefulness to the children attending the National schools. He has also taken a prominent part in the work of a Commission issued by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in 1897, for the investigation of this subject of educational reform. Dr. Walsh has contributed many articles to the periodical press, especially to the Contemporary Review, the Dublin Review, and the Irish Ecclesiastical Record. He is also the author of several works on subjects of general public interest in Ireland, as well as on important branches of theological and scriptural science. Of his published works the principal are an ethical treatise in Latin on "Human Acts," a "Harmony of the Gospel Narrative of the Passion," "The Liturgical Music of the Office and Mass of the Dead," a "Grammar of Gregorian Music," a "Plain Exposition of the Land Act of 1881," "Bimetallism and Monometallism," a volume of addresses on various subjects of general interest, "Addresses on the Irish University Question," a "Statement of the Chief Grievances of the Catholics of Ireland in the Matter of Education, Primary, Intermediate, and University," and his most recently published work, "The Irish University Question," 1897. His address is: Archbishop's House, Dublin.

WANKLYN, James Alfred, M.R.C.S., London, 1856, chemist, was born

at Ashton-under-Lyne, in the year 1834. He studied chemistry under Bunsen at Heidelberg, and became Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh in 1859, was Professor of Chemistry at the London Institution from 1863 to 1870, and Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics at St. George's Hospital from 1877 to 1880. He has held office as Public Analyst for the county of Buckingham, and for the boroughs of Buckingham, Peterborough, Shrewsbury, and High Wycombe. In the year 1856, whilst he was assistant to Dr. Frankland, he turned his attention to the organo-metallic bodies, and, treading in the footsteps of that eminent chemist, produced cadmium-ethyl by the well-known method of acting upon iodide of ethyl by the metal. Next year he devised an original and entirely new method of obtaining the organo-metallic bodies, and produced first sodium-ethyl, and continuing the work during the next few years, formed potassium-ethyl, lithium-ethyl, calcium-ethyl, and strontium-ethyl. These substances are the most combustible known to chemists, and possess the unique property of decomposing carbonic acid at ordinary temperatures, and by their action on carbonic acid yield propionic acid, as was shown in 1858 when Professor Wanklyn made propionic acid in that manner, giving the first example of the artificial production of an organic substance directly from carbonic acid. In 1861, in conjunction with the late Lord Playfair, then Dr. Lyon Playfair, he communicated to the Royal Society of Edinburgh a paper "On a Mode of taking the Density of Vapours of Volatile Liquids at Temperatures below the Boiling-Point." Subsequently he pursued, conjointly with Dr. Emil Erlenmeyer, a series of researches which, besides settling the formula of mannite and the relation of the sugar group to the alcoholic series, afforded one of the earliest complete studies of isomerism among the alcohols. In 1867 he prepared propione, by the action of carbonic oxide on sodium-ethyl, and together with the late Mr. E. T. Chapman and Mr. Miles H. Smith invented the well-known ammonia process of water analysis. Some years later, conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he brought out the moist combustion process. In 1871 he conducted for the Government an investigation into the quality of the milk supplied to the London workhouses. Conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he made periodical analyses of the London Water Supply, which were regularly published by the late Government's Water Examiner in his official returns. Mr. Wanklyn is author of five text-books for Chemists and Medical Officers of Health, viz. : a "Treatise on Water Analysis," a "Treatise on Milk Analysis," 1873; a "Treatise on Coffee, and General Chemical Analysis," 1881; and a "Treatise on Water Analysis," 1890, the two last-named being joint productions of Mr. Wanklyn and himself. He is also the author of "Gas Engineer's Chemical Analysis." In 1859 he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Sciences. He was an honorary member of the Edinburgh Chemical Society, and belongs to none of the European societies.

WANTAGE, Lord, Robert Lloyd-Lindsay, U.K. &c. second son of the late Lord James Lindsay, of Balarnock, was born on April 17, 1862. Educated at Eton, and then entered the Grenadier Guards. He is Litt.D. of the University of Cambridge, Hon. Litt.D. of the Victoria University, and Hon. LL.D. of the University of Glasgow, a Life Governor of Owens College, Manchester, an Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse, and Hon. Fellow of the German Shakespeare Society. In 1879 he married Adelaide, daughter of the Rev. J. B. Lancaster, Rector of Grittleton, Wilts. The Hollies, Fallowfield, Manchester. Athenæum.

Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge, is the eldest son of Francis Marshall Ward, Esq., and was born in 1854, and educated at the Owens College, Manchester, and at Christ's College, Cambridge. He commenced his scientific career as a Field Botanist, after the model of the older school of naturalists, his studies being incited by his early life having been spent in the country. About 1870 he came under the influence of Darwin's writings and teachings, and in 1874 he entered more formally on a scientific career by attending Professor Huxley's Biology course at South Kensington. Since that period he has worked especially as a Cryptogamic and Physiological Botanist and Pathologist. In 1875 he entered the Owens College, Manchester, and obtained distinctions under Professors Roscoe, Gamgee, and Williamson. In 1876 he gained an entrance Scholarship in Natural Science at Christ's College, Cambridge, and remained a scholar of that College until 1879, when he took his B.A. degree, having obtained first class honours in the Natural Science Tripos for that year. He proceeded to the M.A. degree in 1885, and in 1892 was made Doctor of Science of the University of Cambridge. Meanwhile he had assisted in the teaching of Botany at South Kensington, and at the Owens College, and had delivered a course of lectures on Botany at Newnham College, Cambridge. Besides coming under the influence of the late F. M. Balfour and others at Cambridge, he had also studied in Germany during vacation, and especially in the laboratories of Professor Sachs of Würzburg; he had also published the results of original investigations into the embryology of Angiospermous flowering plants, the researches having been carried out in the laboratory at Würzburg and in the Jodrel laboratory at Kew. Immediately after taking his degree in 1879, Mr. Ward was appointed by the Colonial Government to proceed to Ceylon on a scientific mission, to investigate and report upon the causes of the coffee leaf disease, which was then devastating that island. This investigation occupied two years, and he returned to England in 1882, having meanwhile published several Reports and Memoirs on his discoveries connected with the parasitic fungus which caused that disease, and the measures necessary to combat its ravages, as well as on other botanical subjects. During his travels in the tropics he also made observations and collected material and notes for subsequent publications. Some of the principal were on the structure and morphology of Asterina, and of Meliola, and other tropical fungi, and especially of the curious epiphyte Strigula, an epiphyllous lichen. On his return in

"How," 1867; "The Gates Men, Women, and Ghosts," 1868; "The Silent In," "The Silent," "The Trotty Book," 1870; "The Tour," and "What to Poetic Studies," poems, "The Story of Avis," 1877; "My I," "Old Maid's Parable," "Sealed Orders," 1879; "Duet," 1881; "Beyond the Dr. Zay," 1884; "Burdisse," and "The Madonna," 1886; "The Gates Between," "The Fisherman," 1887; "A poem," 1889; "The Struggle," 1889; "A Singular," "Chapters from a Life," "The Story of Jesus Christ," 1897. She was married to Herbert D. Ward in conjunction with him, in 1890, "The Master of the House," and "Come Forth." Her father, Austin Phelps, her father, 1891.

John Quincy Adams, sculptor, was born at Urbana, Mass., 1830. In 1850 he entered the studio of the late H. K. Brown, an architect, where he remained six years. He then opened a studio in New York, where he modelled his "Indian Boy," "The Good Samaritan," "Commodore Perry, with reliefs, "The Death of General Sherman," and many busts and small figures. He built a studio in Fortynine New York, where he made statues of "The Soldier," and statues of Gen. Reynolds, Gen. Washington, Gen. Putnam, an equestrian statue of Gen. Thomas, Gen. Daniel B. F. Johnston, Lafayette. He built a larger studio, where he has made the statue of Washington for the New York Currency building, a colossal statue of President Garfield, with three figures on the pedestal; "The Pillage of Henry Ward Beecher," statues, a seated statue of George Washington, &c. He visited Europe in 1887. For three years he was president, and for one term President of the National Academy of Design.

Mary Augusta, or, as the "Robert Elsmere" prefers to call her, on the title-page of her novel, "The Humphry Ward," is a granddaughter of Dr. Arnold, of Rugby. Her father was his eldest son. The other Thomas Arnold, the son of the Rev. Thomas Ward, at one time held an appointment in Tasmania. There is a granddaughter of Governor Arthur, at Hobart, several of his children born, among them (in 1851)

his eldest daughter, Mary Augusta. Mrs. Ward, who at that time devoted much attention to early Spanish literature and history, contributed a large number of articles on Spanish subjects to the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," edited by Dr. William Smith and Dr. Wace. She also, up to 1885, wrote many critical articles for Macmillan's Magazine. Her first volume was a child's story—"Milly and Olly," 1881, illustrated by Mrs. Alma Tadema. Her first novel was "Miss Bretherton," 1884, which was favourably received but made no particular noise in the literary world. The story is a mere sketch by the side of the later novel. Mrs. Ward's next volume was the translation (1885), of that very remarkable book, Amiel's "Journal Intime." In February 1888, she published her novel of "Robert Elsmere," which was widely read and much discussed. It passed, in five months, in the three-volume form, through seven editions; and since that time over 80,000 copies of the one-volume edition have been sold in this country, and about half a million in America, the sale in this latter case consisting largely, of course, of pirated editions. It has been translated into German, Dutch, Danish, and Spanish. During 1892 appeared her second long novel, "The History of David Grieve," which was followed in 1894 by "Marcella," by "Sir George Tressady" in 1896, and by "Helbeck of Bannisdale" in 1898. In the spring of 1890 Mrs. Ward took part in founding a settlement for social work amongst the crowded working-classes of South St. Pancras. That was known for some years as University Hall. Gradually, however, the work of the settlement outgrew the limits of the small and dingy hall in Marchmont Street, in which, up till June 1897, the social work was carried on by the Warden and residents from the hall in Gordon Square. An appeal was made for funds with which to build a new settlement, and owing to the munificence of Mr. Passmore Edwards, the fine building in Tavistock Place which bears his name was begun in 1896 and opened informally in October 1897, and formally by Mr. John Morley in February 1898. Combined with the social and educational work of the settlement is an annual lectureship, named after Dr. Jowett, the aim of which is to further an improved historical teaching of the Bible. Mrs. Ward remains the Honorary Secretary of the Settlement. She married, in 1872, Mr. Thomas Humphry Ward, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford (see following memoir).

formerly Vicar of St. Barnabas, King Square, E.C., and was born at Hull on Nov. 9, 1845. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated (first class Final Classical School) in Mich. Term, 1868. Before this he had been a candidate for the Civil Service of India, and in 1886 was placed first in the Open Competition. He resigned, however, without proceeding to India, and in February 1869 was elected Fellow of Brasenose, of which College he was Tutor from 1870 to 1880. He then engaged in literary work in London. In 1880-81, with the aid of the principal critical writers of the day, he brought out "The English Poets: Selections with Critical Introductions" (4 vols.); in 1884 he published "Humphry Sandwith, a Memoir"; in 1885 he edited "Men of the Reign"; and in 1887 the 12th edition of "Men of the Time." In 1886, with the help of various writers on Art, he brought out "English Art in the Public Gardens of London," a work illustrated with 120 photogravures; and in 1887 he published "The Reign of Queen Victoria: a Survey of Fifty Years of Progress." In this work he had the assistance of Mr. Matthew Arnold, Professor Huxley, Lord Wolseley, Sir Henry Sumner Maine, and others. It should be added that as an undergraduate he was (with the late Edward Nolan and R. S. Copleston, now Bishop of Colombo) joint author of "The Oxford Spectator." Mr. Humphry Ward is a member of the staff of the Times. In 1872 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Arnold, Mary Augusta, the authoress of "Robert Elsmere" (q.v.). Addresses: 25 Grosvenor Place, S.W.; Stocks, Tring; and Athenæum.

Professor George Charles l., was born on May 23, 1845, at Oakville, Toronto, and is the son of the late Canon Warr, M.A., Vicar of Child-wall, Lancs. His maternal grandfather was Henry Denny, of Waterford, Ireland, founder of the firm of H. Denny & Sons.

He was educated at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and at the University of Cambridge, as a foundation scholar of Christ's, and subsequently of Trinity College. He was first Bell (University) Scholar in 1866, Porson and Members' Prizeman in 1868, third in the first class of the Classical Tripos in 1869. He was elected by competition to a Fellowship at Trinity College, 1870, but refused it on the ground of the religious tests then in force, to which he objected as restricting liberty of conscience, and as debarring Nonconformists from the benefits of the national universities. Mr. Warr otherwise took a prominent part in the Liberal movement which led to the abolition of the tests in 1871. He was Secretary of the Cobden Club from 1871 to 1874, and he has been active in popular educational work. He was on the staff of St. Paul's School from 1870 to 1872, Lecturer at Garrick Chambers from 1872 to 1881, and was elected to the chair of Classical Literature in King's College, London, 1881, having previously been Classical Lecturer in the same college. He is also Professor of Latin at Queen's College, London, and assisted Bishop Barry in founding the Ladies' Department of King's College in 1877. He has advocated the establishment of a Teaching University in London, and in connection therewith, the restoration of Gresham College according to the founder's design, as a department of research and higher (post-graduate) instruction. In 1883 he wrote the "Tale of Troy," a classical masque founded on Homer, which he produced with the cooperation of the late Sir Charles T.
Newton, at Cromwell House; this was followed in 1886 by the "Story of Or-estes," from Æschylus. The mise-en-scène was designed by Lord Leighton, P.R.A., Sir E. J. Poynter, R.A., Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., Mr. Henry Holiday, Mr. George Simonds, and Mr. Walter Crane. The two plays, with introduction and sonnets by the author, and the music (chiefly composed by Sir Walter Parratt), are published in a volume entitled "Echoes of Hellas" (Marcus Ward, 1888), elaborately illustrated by Mr. Crane. Mr. Warr is also the author of a work entitled "The Greek Epic," 1895, and has translated from the German Teuffel-Schwabe's "History of Roman Literature" (Bell, 1890).
He has contributed articles to the Classical Review, and poems and translations to the Academy. He married, in 1885, Constance Emily, daughter of the late Thomas

Keddey Fletcher. Address: King's College, Strand, W.C.

WARRE, The Rev. Edmond, D.D., Head-Master of Eton College, was born in London, on Feb. 12, 1837, and is the second son of the late Henry Warre, of Bindon, Somerset, and Mary Caroline, third daughter of Nicolson Calvert, Hunsdon, Herts. He was educated at Eton, where he obtained the Newcastle Scholarship in 1854, and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a Scholar. He obtained a first class in Classical Moderations in 1856, and in the final Classical Schools in 1859. He rowed in the Oxford University eight against Cambridge at Putney in 1857-58, and was President of the O.U.B.C. in 1859. He was elected Fellow of All Souls in the same year, and retained his Fellowship three years. He assisted in raising the University Volunteer Corps, and was Senior Captain of the Battalion, 1859-60. He was also one of the Committee which formed the N.R.A. He commanded the 2nd Bucks Eton Coll. Volunteer Rifle Corps, 1878-84, and is Hon. Colonel of the corps and V.D. In 1860 he went to Eton as Assistant-Master, a post which he held under Drs. Goodford, Balston, and Hornby, until the appointment as Provost of the last-named in 1884. At that date, Mr. Warre was designated by general opinion as the most likely successor to the vacant post, for which his services and his great popularity at Eton seemed specially to qualify him. He was accordingly elected Head-Master by the governing body, and shortly afterwards he took his degree of D.D. at Oxford. He became one of her Majesty's Honorary Chaplains in 1885, and was elected an Honorary Fellow of Balliol College in 1896. He married, in 1861, Florence Dora, second daughter of Lieut.-Col. C. Malet, of Fontmeil Parva, Dorsetshire. Addresses: Eton College, Windsor; Baron's Down, Dulverton; and Athenæum.

WARREN, Lieut.-General Sir Charles, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., R.E., F.R.S., late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, was born at Bangor, on Feb. 7, 1840, and is the second son of the late Major-General Sir Charles Warren, K.C.B. He was educated at Cheltenham College, Sandhurst, and at Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1857, became Captain in 1869, Major and Lieut.-Colonel in 1878, and Colonel in 1882. From 1867 to 1870 he conducted a series of excavations in Palestine, chiefly round the walls of the enclosure of the Temple of Jerusalem; and wrote "Underground Jerusalem," 1876; "The Temple or the Tomb," 1880; and, in conjunction with

Captain Conder, "Jerusalem," 1876. In 1876 he was Special Commissioner to settle the boundary of the State; and in the same year he settled the Land Question in the land. He commanded the 1st Horse during the Siege of the Field Force in 1880, and the same year. During 1880 he organised a Volunteer Force in the capacity of Colonel and Administrator of the Major Warren returned in 1880, and was appointed Surveying at Cheltenham, and went to Egypt, and was on duty in restoring in the vicinity of the Khiva, and justice the murderers of the party. From 1884 to 1887 he was commander of the Bechuanaland; and in 1887 he was commander of the forces at the station in the same year. He was also a member of the Metropolitan Police, which he resigned in 1887. He was appointed to command the Straits Settlements with the rank of Major-General. He returned to England, and was appointed to command the Thames District. He married, in 1864, Fanny, daughter of Henry Haydon, Esq., of 16 Charing Cross, S.W.

WARREN, Thomas, President of St. Mary's, Oxford, since 1885, was born at Bristol, Oct. 21, 1853, and is a surviving son of Algernon Warren, J.P., merchant in that city. His father was the daughter of Thomas H. gadock, Carmarthenshire. He was educated at Manilla Hall, and then at Clifton College, where he was Scholar of Balliol College from 1872 to 1876. He won the Hulse Scholarship in 1873, took a first class in Moderations in 1873, and won the Prize for Greek Verse in the first class, Lit. Hon. in 1856. He was called to the Bar Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and practised on the Western Circuit. He was appointed Recorder of Portsmouth in 1879, and became a Q.C. in 1888. He is the author of "Treatise on Rating." Mr. Warry was married, in 1860, to Catherine Emily, daughter of the late John Clitsome sen, of Taunton. Address: 1 Essex St., Temple, E.C.

WATERHOUSE, Alfred, R.A., LL.D., born July 19, 1830, at Liverpool, and is the eldest son of Alfred Waterhouse, of Liverpool, and White Knights Park, Reading. He studied architecture in Manchester, under Richard Lane, where he began to practise his profession, after travelling, chiefly in Italy. His first considerable work was the Manchester Assize Houses, the result of a hardly-contested competition. In that city he has also been the architect of the County Jail, the Owens College, the National Provincial Bank of England, the Refuge Assurance Company's Offices, and the Town Hall, the result of another competition.
In Liverpool his works comprise the London and North-Western Hotel, the Sea-man's Orphanage, the Turner Memorial Home, the Royal Infirmary, and University College; in London, the Natural His-broke at Cambridge, have been partly rebuilt from his designs. At Leeds the Yorkshire College of Science and W. W.

Brown & Company's Bank have been erected from his designs. The Hotel Métropole, Brighton, is also an example of his work. Among mansions may be mentioned Heythrop, Oxon., Eaton Hall, Cheshire, Iwerne Minster, Dorset, as his most conspicuous works. Mr. Waterhouse was honoured by receiving a grand prize for architecture at the Paris Exhibition of 1867, and a "Rappel" at that of 1878.
He is a Member of the Royal and Imperial Academy of Vienna; an Associate of the Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres,

WATERHOUSE, John William,
R.A., was born in Rome in 1849. His first important picture was "Sleep and his brother Death," exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1874. This was followed by "Miranda," 1875; "After the Dance" (hung on the line), 1876, and "The Emperor Honorius," a classical picture, the most important he had as yet painted, which is said to have been suggested by a passage in the "Antonia" of Wilkie Collins. The "Oracle" and the "Lady of Shalott," and "Circe" followed among many other works, and in 1895 Mr.
Waterhouse achieved fame with his "St.
Cecilia," and with his "Pandora" in 1896. "Hylas and the Nymphs" was exhibited in 1897, and "Flora and the Zephyrs" and "Ariadne" in 1898. In 1899 he exhibited a portrait of Miss Molly Rickman. He was elected an A.R.A. in 1885, and R.A. ten years later. In April 1899 he was elected a member of the Athenæum under Rule 2. Addresses: 6 Primrose Hill Studios, Regent's Park,

"Rates and Fares," "Our Railways," "The Progress of British Elementary Education at the present time," "Technical Education and Industrial Employment of the Working Classes in England," "The Employment of Women Abroad," "French Silk Manufacture," "Industrial Employment of the Working Classes of Commercial Geography," "The Essence of Art: is it a Science?" "Manual or Mechanical Instruction, a Necessary or a Compulsory System of Education?" "Diamonds and Precious Stones." Mr. Watkin's advocacy of the necessity of Technical Education is founded on extensive investigation; he has visited the principal capitals and cities of Europe and made in 1878 an extended tour of the United States and Canada. He was a Captain in the Royal Artillery, has served in Hong-Kong, India, at Chatham, and in Africa. Arkston Gardens, S.W.

Sir Edward William Watkin, Bart., Knight of the Order of the Medjidie, of Greece, and of Leopold of Belgium, the eldest son of the late Watkin, who was born in Manchester in 1800, began business as a merchant in 1820, and continued till his death in 1861. Edward William Watkin, born Sept. 26, 1819, and was first employed in his father's counting-house (becoming a partner), until the year 1840, when he was appointed to the management of the Trent Valley Railway. He joined the London and North-Western Railway Co., and to his various offices he has now retired, having been manager, and afterwards as a director, of the Manchester, Lincolnshire Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. He was a director of the Great Eastern Railway, and became one of the directors of the Manchester Athenæum, and was secretary of the committee organised to extricate the company from its pecuniary embarrassments, and carried out the plans of that institution, and in the Free Trade Hall, presided over by Mr. Charles Dickens, and Serjeant Talfourd, in the years 1843, 1844, and 1845 respectively. In 1843 he wrote a pamphlet entitled "A Plea for Public Parks," and became one of the honorary secretaries of the committee which followed, through whose efforts the three existing parks (viz., the "Queen's," "Peel" and "Philip's") were obtained for Manchester and Salford. In 1843 he and a few other members of the Manchester Athenæum started the "Saturday half-holiday" in Manchester, which resulted in the general closing of the warehouses for business at 2 P.M. every Saturday. In 1845, Mr. Watkin was one of the originators of the Manchester Examiner newspaper. In 1861 he undertook a private mission to Canada, at the desire of the Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the object of bringing the five British Provinces into union, and the establishment of a connection between Canada and the Atlantic by an independent railway system, which he successfully accomplished. Mr. Watkin was first elected to Parliament in 1857, but was afterwards unseated. He was returned to Parliament, unopposed, for Stockport, in 1864, and again returned at the head of the poll in 1865. He was defeated, however, by a narrow majority in 1868, and contested East Cheshire unsuccessfully in 1869. Whilst in Parliament in 1866-67, he obtained, as the Chairman of two Select Committees, important alterations in the laws affecting railways, and especially the change in the law of limited liability, which enabled companies to reduce the capital by mere resolution, and without winding up. In 1868 he received the honour of knighthood. Sir E. Watkin was again returned to Parliament at the general election of February 1874, for the united boroughs of Hythe and Folkestone, and was returned unopposed for the same boroughs, at the general election of 1880. In that year he was created a baronet. He was High Sheriff of Cheshire, 1874. He has done much to improve the harbours of Boulogne and Calais, so as to establish fixed services by large steamers, to increase the comfort of the transit, and to have already reduced the time between London and Paris to seven hours; this movement is progressing. The proposed tunnel under the Channel to connect England and France is an enterprise with which he has been connected in conjunction with the late Michel Chevalier, M. Léon Say, and other eminent French and English public men. Assuming that the experiment would succeed, Mr. Watkin recommended Mr. Gladstone to approach the European and American powers with a view to the complete neutralisation of the work, believing that this would do away with

WATTS, George Frederick, R.A., D.C.L., LL.D., born in London on Feb. 23, 1817, first exhibited at the Academy in 1837. In addition to portraits, he made some historical attempts, such as "Isabella finding Lorenzo dead," from Boccaccio, in 1840, and a scene from "Cymbeline" in 1842. At Westminster Hall, in 1843, his cartoon of "Caractacus led in Triumph through the Streets of Rome," obtained one of the three highest class prizes of £300, and created sanguine hopes for his future career. Having spent upwards of four years in Italy, he again obtained, in 1847, the highest honours at the competi- tion in Westminster Hall. His two colossal oil-pictures, "Echo" and "Alfred inciting the Saxons to prevent the Landing of the Danes," which secured for him one of the three highest class prizes of £500, were, with the pictures of Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. Cross, purchased by the Commis- sioners. The latter is in one of the com- mittee-rooms of the new Parliament Houses. Mr. Watts exhibited his "Paolo and Fran- cesca" and "Orlando pursuing the Fata Morgana" at the British Institution in 1848, and his full-length portrait of Lady Holland at the Royal Academy in the same year. "Life's Illusions," a picture of the class of "Fata Morgana," exhibited in 1849, was followed in 1850 by "The Good Samaritan," painted in honour of Thomas Wright, of Manchester, and presented by the artist to the Town Hall of Manchester. For the Houses of Parliament Mr. Watts has executed one of the frescoes in the Poets' Hall, "St. George overcomes the Dragon," from Spenser, finished in 1853, and he has painted in fresco the west end of the new hall at Lincoln's Inn. For some time he has exhibited regularly at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery. His principal productions have been por- traits and ideal or mythological subjects, such as the well-known "Love and Death"; "Endymion"; "Orpheus and Eurydice"; "Daphne"; and (1886) "Hope." In 1882 an exhibition of Mr. Watts's works was held at the Grosvenor Gallery, and in February 1897 another exhibition of his works was held at the New Gallery. Reaching the age of eighty in this month, he was pre- sented with a congratulatory address, signed by several hundreds of names, the foremost in the country, and representa- tive of the most divergent interests. The bar, set to Corot in the last year of his life can alone be compared to this presentation. Mr. Watts originally painted for his own house some forty portraits of the most eminent of his contemporaries in public life, literature, and art, and these he has now bequeathed to the nation. He executed the portrait of Lord Tennyson in 1860. Mr. Watts is still at work, either at his easel or at an immense equestrian statue, which he hopes to be the crown of his career. The Watts portraits are now placed in the National Portrait Gallery. They include portraits of Tennyson, Matthew Arnold, and a number of other great Englishmen of modern times, and are unquestionably the prime glory of this section of the national collections. Mr. Watts has also presented to the Tait Gallery a number of his finest allegorical paintings. In 1869 he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait of the Rt. Hon. Gerald Balfour, M.P. In 1880 the honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon Mr. Watts by the University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. was offered by the University of Cambridge in 1882, and conferred the following year. In 1883 Mr. Gladstone was empowered to bestow the honour of a baronetcy upon Mr. Watts, which honour was declined by him. He is a member of foreign academies, and has received the Cross of the Légion d'Honneur. In 1886 Mr. Watts married Mary, third daughter of the late Charles Edward Fraser Tytler, Esq., of Aldourie, Inverness-shire. London address: Little Holland House, Melbury Road, Kensington, W.

WATTS-DUNTON, Theodore, poet and critic, was born at St. Ives in 1836, but has spent most of his life in London. He received a somewhat elaborate private education at Cambridge. Originally trained as a naturalist, his father having been an active member of scientific societies, he was afterwards brought up to the law, and passed his legal examination in 1863. He first attracted the attention of the literary public as a writer of sonnets. One of the chief of those who took an interest in his early poetical work was Dante Rossetti, whose intimate friend Mr. Watts became. Under Mr. Rossetti's influence he made a critical study of the Old Masters in Florence, Venice, and Rome. After Rossetti's death he expounded the principles of his art in the Nineteenth Century and elsewhere. Mr. Watts-Dunton, then Mr. Watts, became literary and artistic critic to the Examiner at a time when that paper was being brilliantly conducted by Prof. Minto, who numbered among his contributors such men as Mr. Swinburne and Mr. W. Bell Scott. When Prof. Minto left the Examiner Mr. Watts and became the Athenæum, as well as in the Examiner, he found criticism, with efforts by the Athenæum. Mr. Watts-Dunton's 'cyclopædia' are volume from 1880 and his 'Reminiscences' are in the Athenæum. He has to the Quarterly Century, and War. He is specially known of the romantic movement. Poetic Romance, 1895, after being known to a select circle, endeavoured to cast temporary life to the romantic art which expressed only in. , LL.B., is the son of Webb, and was born in 1859. He was educated at private schools in London, in Switzer-land, at the Birkbeck Institute, and the City of London College. After spending three years in an office in the City, he entered the Lower Division of the War Office in 1878, became a Surveyor of Taxes in the following year, and in 1881 gained a place in the Colonial Office (Class I.), by open competition; he resigned, however, in 1891. He then lectured on Political Economy at the City of London College, and the Working-Men's College, and he now is a Lecturer in the same subject at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He was called to the Bar in 1885, has devoted a good deal of time to writing on economical subjects, and still continues to do so. He has a seat on the London County Council as Progressive Member for Deptford. Amongst his many works there may be mentioned: "Socialism in England," 1890; "The Eight Hours' Day," which he published in 1891, conjointly with Mr. Harold Cox; "The London Programme," 1892; "The History of Trade Unionism," 1894, con-jointly with his wife; also with her, in 1898, "Industrial Democracy," and "Prob-lems of Modern Industry" (a reprint of essays and studies written during the last ten years); and "Labour in the Longest Reign," 1898. Mr. Webb was married, in 1892, to Beatrice, daughter of the late Richard Potter, who is herself deeply interested in matters relating to Trade Unionism and labour problems, and who wrote the "Co-operative Movement in Great Britain" in 1891, and also con-tributed to Charles Booth's "Life and Labour of the People." Address: 41 Grosvenor Road, Westminster Embank-ment.

WEBBER, The Right Rev. William Thomas Thornhill, D.D., Bishop of Brisbane, is the son of the late William Webber, surgeon, of Norwich, by Eliza, daughter of the late Sir Isaac Preston, Bart. He was born in Upper Grosvenor Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Jan. 30, 1837, and educated first at Tonbridge School, and afterwards at Norwich, under the late John Woolley, D.C.L. (who was subsequently head of Sydney University), and at Pembroke College, Oxford. B.A. 1859, M.A. 1862, D.D., honoris causa, 1885. He was ordained by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait), deacon, 1860; and priest, 1861. He was assistant curate at Chiswick from 1860 to 1864, when he was put in charge of the newly-constituted district and parish of St. John the Evangelist, Red Lion Square, Holborn, which he held up to 1885. Here he built the noble church in Red Lion Square, together with clergy-house attached, and schools with accommodation for 700 children in three departments. The site, church, clergy-house, schools, &c., cost £49,000. This large sum of money was collected and administered by Mr. Webber, in the course of an exceedingly busy life of public usefulness. He was one of the Governors of Sion College from 1882 to 1885, and represented Finsbury on the London School Board from 1882 to 1885; was Chairman of the Local Managers of the Board Schools from 1877 to 1885, and Guardian of Holborn Union from 1874 to 1883. He was also connected very prominently during these years with the Charity Organisation Society, the Working-Men's Club and Institute Union, the Girls' and the Young Men's Friendly Societies, and many other institutions and societies. On the resignation of Bishop Hale he was appointed to the vacant See of Brisbane, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), on St. Barnabas's Day, 1885. When the Bishop took charge of the diocese in 1885 there were but 33 clergy and 39 churches; these, as the result of five years' work, have been increased to 67 clergy and 75 churches. Address: Bishopsbourne, Brisbane.

WEBER, Sir Hermann, Kt., M.D., F.R.C.P., received his medical education at Bonn University, of which he is M.D., and at Guy's Hospital. He is a Fellow of the Royal Med. Chir. Soc., Consulting Physician of the German Hospital, London, and of the Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor. He received the honour of knighthood at New Year 1899. Together with Mr. Rube, Dr. Hillier, and Dr. Malcolm Morris he was appointed by the Prince of Wales as representative of the National Association for the Prevention of Consumption and Other Forms of Tuberculosis at the Berlin Congress for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, May 24-28, 1899. In conjunction with his son, Dr. Parkes Weber, he has published a work, now in its second edition, on "The Mineral Waters and Health Resorts of Great Britain." He is also author of "Notes on the Climate of the Swiss Alps," 1864; "Klimato-Therapie," in Ziemssen's "Handbook of Gen. Therap.," 1880; the Croonian Lectures for 1885 on "Hygienic and Climatic Treatment of Phthisis"; and of many contributions to Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," Allbutt's "System," the Transactions of the Royal Med. Chir. Soc., &c. Address: 10 Grosvenor Street, W.

WEBSTER, Hugh Alexander, born April 21, 1849, at Laurencekirk, Kincardineshire, is the second son of the Rev.

David Webster, Colonel, and Isabella Mackenzie; the most part privately educated. He had spent the early part of his life as schoolmaster, he afterwards attended the University of Edinburgh from 1872 and 1880. After leaving the University he devoted to scholastic and literary work, and joined the editorial staff of the "Encyclopædia Britannica" in 1881. He has contributed to the success of the work in biography, literature, and natural history, geology, and geographically. For some time he has been in hand with the "Europe," "Italy," "Japan," "Patagonia," as well as with the geographical work of the "Encyclopædia." He has contributed also to the "Encyclopædia," the "Globe," the "Ordnance Gazetteer," and to the "Press." He was one of the first to edit the Scottish (now Royal) Gazette in 1884. He was the chief editor of the first honorary edition of the magazine (1885-87), and his services were elected first of the Society. He was a member of the University of Edinburgh in 1887, and was elected Fellow of the Society of Edinburgh in 1888. Address: Edinburgh University.

WEBSTER, Sir Richard, K.B., G.C.M.G., Q.C., General, second son of Sir Richard Webster, Esq., Q.C., and daughter of Richard Calverley, Abbey, Lincolnshire, was born in 1842. He received his education at Trinity College, Cambridge, and gained a Foundation scholarship. He graduated in both the Mathematical and Classical Tripos. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1864. He was afterwards an ancient but honorary officer of the Postman in the Court of Westminister. He was Counsel in 1878, and is the only man who has in the past received that honour. He has been extensively in most of the heavy commercial cases of the day, and in a large general practice, in numerous appeal cases before the Lords. He is one of the judges of the Charterhouse. He contested the election of 1880. He was appointed Attorney General in the first Government of Lord Salisbury, having up to that date held the same office from 1886 and was reappointed in 1895. From July to November 1885 he was at Llancauneston, and at the general election of 1885 he successfully stood for Wight, defeating Mr. the former Liberal member, by a majority of 436. In 1886 he was again elected at constituency, where among others he is extremely popular. Secretary-General in the late Conservative Government, he appeared in the Times before the Parnell

In 1893 he was one of the representatives in the Behring case. He married, in the previous year, Miss Mary, the only daughter of William Calthrop, Esq., M.D., of the county of Lincoln; she died in the year 1877. Addresses: Hornsey, Kensington, W.; 2 Pump Court, E.C.; Winterford, Cranford; and Athenæum.

WEDDERBURN, Alexander Dunlop, Q.C., was born in 1854, and was the surviving son of the late James Wedderburn, of the Madras Barristers' Society (see Burke's "Baronetage," 1896). He was educated at Balliol College, Herts, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1877. He was called to the Inner Temple in January 1880; to the Queen's Bench in May 1897, and to the Exchequer in November 1897.

In 1887, Mathilde, only child of William Segelcke, Esq. Address: Cadogan Place, S.W.; Chambers Building, Temple, E.C.

WEDDERBURN, Sir William, was born in Edinburgh on 18th March 1838, and succeeded his father as 10th Lord Wedderburn in 1882. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, and Edinburgh University, where he won the third place in open competition for the Indian Civil Service. He was in the Bombay Civil Service from 1860 to 1887, became a Judge of the Court at Bombay, and finally acted as Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay. He was President of the Indian National Conference, was a member of the Royal Commission on Indian Expenditure in 1894, and acted as Chairman of the Indian Parliamentary Committee. After leaving North Ayrshire unsuccessfully for the Liberal member in the following year. Sir W. has written numerous papers on Procedure, Arbitration Courts, Banks, Village Communities, and matters of Indian interest. He was married, in 1878, to Mary Blanche, daughter of H. W. Hoskyns, of North Perrott Manor, Somerset. Address: 84 Palace Chambers, Westminster.

WEDMORE, Frederick, born at Richmond Hill, Clifton, July 9, 1844, is the eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Wedmore, of Druid Stoke, Stoke Bishop. He is of an old Quaker family, and was educated at a Quaker private school, and studied afterwards at Lausanne and Paris. Resolved upon the pursuit of journalism and eventually literature, he entered, for a while, a Bristol newspaper office, but in 1868 came to London and wrote occasionally in the Spectator. His novels of "A Snapt Gold Ring" and "Two Girls," published in 1871 and 1874, were, at the time, well reviewed, but are understood to be works on which Mr. Wedmore sets small store. He has never been willing to reprint them, and it is no doubt by his volumes of short stories, "Pastorals of France," "Renunciations," "English Episodes," and "Orgeas and Miradou," that Mr. Wedmore takes serious rank as an imaginative writer. But about the time of the appearance of the first of these volumes, "Pastorals of France" (1877), he had become known to the public by his contributions to art-history and criticism; "Studies in English Art" showing his familiarity with the earlier masters of the English School, the "Masters of Genre Painting" (1880), evincing an appreciation of Dutchmen such as Terburg and Metz, and of the elegant and penetrating art of the French Eighteenth Century; while, a little later, "The Four Masters of Etching," and a much-remarked study in the Nineteenth Century of the great French etcher, Mercur, proved Mr. Wedmore's knowledge of the principles and history of the art of etching. More recently, his volume called "Fine Prints," in the Collector Series, dealt likewise from the point of view of the connoisseur with mezzotint and line-engraving, and in a manner singularly lively and vivid. Mr. Wedmore occasionally contributes a paper on art or dramatic subjects to the reviews, and the more important art criticisms in the Standard, with which journal he has been connected in this matter since 1878, have for years been known to proceed from his pen. He has nevertheless found time to produce an original study on the chief French novelist, Balzac, in the Great Writers Series (1889), to edit the English edition of M. Michel's "Rembrandt" (1893), and to write since that time the later and most characteristic volumes of his imaginative work. It should be added that Mr. Wedmore has not only given readings of his short stories before distinguished audiences in England, but that he has visited America and lectured at Harvard and the Johns Hopkins University in 1885. He is an Honorary Fellow of the Royal Society of Painters, Etchers, and Engravers, and a member of the Committee of the Burlington Fine Arts Club. He is married to the youngest daughter of the late Mr. John Peele Clapham, a Yorkshire magistrate and Treasurer of County Courts of the West Riding, and by her he has one daughter. Club: Burlington Fine Arts.

WEIR, Harrison William, born at Lewes, May 5, 1824, second son of John Weir and Elizabeth Jenner, at an early age showed a great inclination for drawing animals and birds, and the study of natural history. He was, in 1837, articled to Mr. George Baxter to learn designing on wood, colour-painting, and wood-engraving. This proving quite a different kind of work to what it was represented, he used means to have his articles cancelled, but having in vain endeavoured to get released from his engagement, he of necessity served his time; thus seven years of his life, as far as the work of an artist was concerned, were entirely wasted, and therefore he, in his profession, is self-taught. He was elected a member of the new Society of Painters in Water-Colours in February 1849, and some time before exhibited his first picture, the "Dead Shot," at the British Institution. He also exhibited in Suffolk Street and at the Royal Academy, his pictures of animals, birds, domestic poultry, fruit, &c., being much sought after. Among his best are "Startled," "The Forester," "A Servant of all Work," with several of birds singing: "The Christmas Carol"—a robin, published by the Illustrated London News. Mr Weir's first wood drawings appeared in the Illustrated London News, also the Pictorial Times; he was one of the original staff of the Field, and also the Graphic and Black and White. He has been connected, either by his pencil, pen, or both, with over one hundred and twenty books, his best known being "Routledge's Natural History," "Poultry Book," "Funny Dogs with Funny Tales," "The Adventures of a Bear," also those of "A Dog" and "A Cat." His later works, which are written by himself as well as illustrated, are: "Every Day in the Country," "Animal Stories, Old and New," "Bird Stories, Old and New"; but what he considers his chief book is, "Our Cats, and All About Them," a quite original production, and one that will last as a work of reference, the standard of excellence being given in it, as laid down by Mr. Harrison Weir for judging at shows. He also gives rules for breeding cats; among others the

WELLS, H. G., B.Sc., is the son of Joseph Wells, a professional cricketer, and was born at Bromley, Kent, on Sept. 21, 1866. He was educated at a private school at Bromley, then at Midhurst Grammar School, and afterwards at the Royal College of Science, London. He took the B.Sc. degree at the London University with first class honours in Zoology, and he is also a Fellow of the College of Preceptors. After serving as a draper's apprentice from 1881 to 1883, he was successively a Junior Master in a school, Scholar at the Royal College of Science from 1884 to 1888, and Science Master in a private school from 1888 to 1890. In the latter year he began to coach for London University examinations, and also wrote and lectured on educational methods. After an illness in 1893 he became a journalist, and worked for the Pall Mall Gazette; was on the staff of the Saturday Review from 1894 to 1896, reviewed for Nature, and was dramatic critic of the Pall Mall Gazette in 1895. Mr. Wells now devotes his time to novel-writing, and he is the author of the following works: "Select Conversations with an Uncle," 1895; "The Time Machine," 1895; "The Stolen Bacillus," 1895; "The Wonderful Visit," 1895; "The Island of Doctor Moreau," 1896; "The Wheels of Chance," 1896; "The Plattner Story and Others," 1897; "The Invisible Man," 1897; "The War of the Worlds," 1898; "When the Sleeper Wakes," 1899. He has also published a "Text-book of Biology," 2 vols., 1892-93. Address: Heatherlea, Worcester Park, Surrey.

WELLS, Henry Tanworth, R.A., was born in London on Dec. 12, 1828, and is the only son of Henry Tanworth and Charlotte Wells. His first practice in art was as a miniature painter. When only seventeen years of age he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait of "Master Arthur Prinsep," a brother of Mr. Valentine Prinsep, R.A. Steadily, if at first slowly, the young artist advanced in this difficult branch of art. From the year in which he first exhibited till 1861 he never ceased to be fully represented as a miniaturist on the walls of the Academy; and in this long series were a portrait of Princess Mary of Cambridge, painted for her Majesty, 1853; a group of the painter himself and his wife in tourist costume, 1860; together with full lengths of the Duchess of Sutherland and Frances, Countess of Waldegrave. In the Academy Exhibition of 1861 he made his first appearance as an oil-painter with a full-length portrait of the volunteer colonel, Lord Ranelagh. A prominent place was awarded in 1865 to his "Preparing a Tableau Vivant"—a portrait group of three sisters; and he also painted a landscape, entitled "Orchard at Twilight." In 1866 he painted a large picture of "Valentine Prinsep Point," and in May 1867 was elected A.R.A. Since that time he has been a constant exhibitor of pictures, some of which are of historical importance, as "The Rides Past and Present," 1867; "The Earl of Spencer and their Friends," 1868; "Letters and Notes from the Side," 1868; "Lord Clarendon with his Attendants in France," 1868; the House of Lords, painted on a scale for the Fishmongers' Company; "Lord Chancellor Selwyn," 1868; "A November Morning at the House, Yorkshire," 1868; "Robert Jardine, with Gregory," 1868; "The Old Stonebreaker," 1868; "Walk," 1879. In 1880 he painted a large painting of "Victoria presenting the Queen in the East of June 20, 1837, receiving the death of William IV. and the Archbishop Howley and the Emperor of Berlin." In 1882 was exhibited at Yewden, a group of artists (including the painter himself and his friends, painted for the painter G. C. Schwabe. This was followed by subjects of labour, "Loaders," 1884; and "Quarrymen," 1885. In 1887 appeared his painting "The Queen and her Judges," representing the ceremonial of the opening of the Courts of Justice. Since that time he has sent a succession of portraits to the Academy Exhibitions, and has painted Drury Lowe and his brother Drury Drury-Lowe, Mr. T. N. of Hounds, Mr. Justice Lowthian Bell, Bart., Sir M. Beach, the Bishop of Ripon, Pembroke, (in 1899), Sir C. (presentation portrait), and Finlay, Q.C., M.P., Solicitor-General, the Grillon Club Series, and was elected a Royal Academician in 1870. He married Joan, an accomplished artist, who painted Addresses: Thorpe Lodge, W., &c.; and Athenæum.

WELLS, Commandant Latour, R.N., Captain of the 1st London Fire Brigade, was educated at Eton, and entered the service in 1871. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant in 1878, and Lieutenant in 1881. In 1882 he joined H.M.S. "Hector" in the Egyptian War, and saw action in command of a torpedo boat, and received the Khedive's Medal, and in 1892 was promoted. He was a Member of the Royal Naval Committee of 1891, and Manager of the torpedo manoeuvres on the lake. Under of H.M.S. Benbow he sailed with all his clothes on board with all his clothes on board with all his clothes on board. He was the life of a boy who had fallen from the ship. Commander Wells' last was that of Senior Officer of the Portsmouth flotilla of torpedo destroyers. As a torpedoist he had a high reputation, and in the manoeuvres of 1890 he showed ability while in command of No. 87, making a continuous run of miles in supposed hostile waters; which he examined fifty miles. A part of this cruise took place in crowded anchorage, and as he tried to escape observation he was detected during the night without success. In 1896 he was appointed Commander of the London Fire Brigade. Wells is the author of "Jack Wells' Souvenir of the Victory." In 1897, Ida Caroline, daughter of the late Joseph Busk of Welwyn, Herts. Adolphe, Metropolitan Fire Brigade, South-

Educated at Eton and Christ Church (B.A. 1841). In the same year he returned to the House of Commons, the Eastern Division of which he represented until 1852, when he resigned his seat, having lost the support of the protective measures of Sir R. Peel. In 1852 he was returned as a Liberal for Haddingtonshire, which he represented until his succession to the peerage; was a Lord of the Treasury under the Aberdeen Ministry, siding with the Peelite party of that year from the Administration of Lord Palmerston. As Lord March he took a very conspicuous part in the Reform movement, and he is an authority on various questions connected with naval defence and armaments. He was Lord of the London Scottish and, as Chairman of the National Rifle Association, presided over the Wimbledon meetings. He is an A.D.C., and a Deputy-Lieutenant of Haddingtonshire since 1846. He succeeded to the Earldom of Wemyss on the death of his father, Jan. 1, 1883. His lordship is the author of "Letters on Military Organisation," 1871. He married Anne, daughter of the 1st Earl of Lichfield, in 1843. The Countess died, much regretted, in July 1896. Addresses: 23 St. James's Place, S.W.; Elcho Castle, Perth, &c.

Gladstone's creation, but at the time of the first introduction of his great leader's Home Rule Bill his convictions drove him into the Unionist camp. His allegiance to his leader was, however, not shaken in other directions, and in Mr. Gladstone's closing years he was his chief supporter in the ex-Premier's crusade against Turkish atrocities in Armenia. He has long been very prominent and active as Chairman of the Armenian Committee, and at Chester, in August 1895, he supported Mr. Gladstone on the platform when the latter delivered his last great speech in the cause of the oppressed Christians in the East. He filled the office of Master of the Horse from 1880 to 1886, was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Cheshire in 1883, and of the County of London in 1888. The Duke is also High Steward of Westminster, and A.D.C. to the Queen, and honorary Colonel of the 13th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers. His London residence, Grosvenor House, contains a valuable collection of pictures by old masters, and he is well known as an owner and breeder of racehorses. He married (1), in 1852, Constance, daughter of the 2nd Duke of Sutherland (she died in 1880); and (2), in 1882, Catherine Cavendish, daughter of the 2nd Baron Chesham. The Duke's eldest daughter was married in 1894 to Prince Adolphus of Teck. Addresses: Grosvenor House, London; and Eaton Hall, Chester.

WEYLER, Don Valeriano y Nicolan, Spanish general, was born in 1840. He entered the army at an early age, and after greatly distinguishing himself in the San Domingo campaign, he was appointed Captain-General of the Canary Isles in 1879. During the Carlist war of 1874-77 he was uniformly successful. Having served in the Philippines and at Barcelona, he was despatched in 1896 to Cuba to ascertain if stricter methods would succeed where the mildness of Martinez Campos had failed. His rule there was called firm by his friends, and brutal by his enemies, and it was probably the chief indirect cause in the Spanish-American war of 1898. He was recalled to Spain in October 1897, to be succeeded by Marshal Blanco, since when he has lived in retirement, and although he has been credited with the desire to become the military dictator of Spain, up to the present he remains a loyal subject of Alfonso XIII.

WEYMAN, Stanley John, roman- cist, was born at Ludlow, Shropshire, on Aug. 7, 1855. He is the second son of the late Thomas Weyman, solicitor. He was educated at Shrewsbury School and Christ Church, Oxford, and took his B.A. degree in 1877. He read for the Bar after leaving

WHARTON, The Right Hon. John Lloyd, M.P., is the son of the late J. T. Wharton, of Dryburn, Durham, and was born in 1837. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1862. He represented Durham in the House of Commons from 1871 to 1874, and he has, since 1886, been Conservative member for the Ripon Division of Yorkshire. He received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Durham in 1887. Mr. Wharton is an Alderman, and Chairman of the Durham County Council, a Director of the North-Eastern Railway, a Deputy-Lieutenant, and Chairman of Quarter-Sessions. He was married, in 1870, to Susan, daughter of the Rev. A. D. Shafto. Addresses: 42 St. James's Place, S.W.; and Dryburn, Durham.

WHARTON, Rear-Admiral Sir William James Lloyd, K.C.B., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., is the second son of the late Robert Wharton, County Court Judge, of York, and was born in London, March 2, 1843. He was educated at the Rev. Philip ia, Sept. 10, 1836, and graduated at Point Military Academy in 1859. as Lieutenant of Cavalry until 1861, he resigned and entered the Confederate service for the war between the States, where his abilities had ample opportunity, and his rise in rank was rapid. Soon became Colonel of an Infantry Regiment, and then Brigadier-General, Major-General, and Lieut.-General of the Army. He commanded the Cavalry Corps of the Western Army in 1862, and was made Senior Cavalry General of the Confederate Armies, May 11, 1864. After the close of the war he became a lawyer and settled in Alabama in 1869, and was elected to Congress, serving in the Lower House of the Forty-seventh, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, and Fifty-fifth Congresses. On the outbreak of war between the United States and Mexico in 1898 he was one of the first to offer his services to the Government, and received an appointment as Major-General of Volunteers. He was second in command of the force sent to invade Cuba, and his energy, bravery, and ability were conspicuous in the operations resulting in the capture of Santiago, July 17, 1898. In August he returned with his troops to the United States to recuperate, after a severe campaign in the malarial regions in the sickly season.

WHISTLER, James Abbott Mill, painter, was born at Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1834, and is the son of an engineer. He studied first at the Military Academy of West Point, and afterwards, in 1857, under Gleyre, the artist, in Paris. There he was a fellow-student with George du Maurier, who has so amusingly caricatured him in "Trilby." In 1859 he began to exhibit at the Royal Academy, and in 1863 settled in London. His more important paintings are: "The White Girl," 1862; "The Last of Old Westminster," 1863; "At the Piano," 1867; "Portrait of my Mother" (an arrangement in grey and black, now in the Luxembourg, in Paris) and "Portrait of Thomas Carlyle" (bought by the Glasgow Corporation in 1891), 1872, two of his most famous portraits; "Nocturne in Blue and Silver," 1882; "Arrangement in Black" (Lady Archibald Campbell), and the still better known "Arrangement in Grey and Green" (Miss Alexander), both exhibited in Munich in 1888. Of later portraits, that of Señor Sarasate is the most famous. His fame as an etcher is even higher than his fame as a painter; and he has also issued some wonderful lithographs on the architectural beauties of London, especially the picturesque side of river life. His theories on art are eminently original and individual, and in consequence have been the subject of much criticism; he has made most interesting experiments in colour, generally succeeding best with the more subdued. In 1878 he sued Mr. Ruskin for disparaging his art in "Fors Clavigera," and at the end of a very lengthy trial he was awarded one farthing damages. He became President of the Royal Society of British Artists, and obtained for it a Royal Charter. In 1888 he married the widow of the late E. W. Goodwin, architect and writer, and a daughter of Mr. J. B. Philip the sculptor. In 1895 he was sued by Sir William Eden for not delivering up a portrait of Lady Eden which had been paid for. He was allowed to keep the portrait, but amerced in damages. Besides being a painter, Mr. Whistler has published one of the most amusing books of modern times, "The Gentle Art of making Enemies," 1890, which is in every way a remarkable human document. He has also written "Ten o'Clock," 1888. In 1898 he was the President of the International Exhibition of Art which was held at Knightsbridge. Paris address: 110 Rue du Bac.

WHITAKER, William, B.A. (London), F.R.S., F.G.S., Assoc. Inst. C.E., was born in London, May 4, 1836, and educated at St. Alban's Grammar School and at University School, London. He was appointed to the Geological Survey, April 1, 1857, and retired from the service in 1896. He has written many Geological survey memoirs, notably "The Geology of the London Basin," 1872; and "The Geology of London, and of Part of the Thames Valley," 2 vols., 1889; also many papers in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, in the Geological Magazine, and in several other scientific publications, ranging from 1860 to 1898. Mr. Whitaker was Murchiston Medallist of the Geological Society, 1886; and received a medal from the Society of Arts in 1890. He was editor of the Geological Record for several years, and is hon. member of the Geologists' Association, of the Geological Societies of Manchester and of Liverpool, and of various other local societies. He has been President of the Norwich Geological Society, of the Hants Field Club, of the Hants Lit. Phil. Soc., of the Geological Section of the British Association, 1895, and of a Section of the Congress of the Sanitary Institute, 1886 and 1897. He was elected President of the Herts Nat. Hist. Soc. in 1897, and of the Geological Society in 1898. Permanent address: 3 Campden Road, Croydon.

WHITE, The Hon. Andrew Dickson, American educator and statesman,

Stanford University, in California. In 1892 he became American Minister to Russia, and in 1897 he was again sent to Germany as American Ambassador. President White gave very largely of his own means to Cornell University, and endowed the school of history and political science in that institution with his own valuable library, comprising 30,000 vols. and 10,000 pamphlets. Besides contributions to periodicals he has written "Outlines of a Course of Lectures on History," 1861; "A Word from the North-West," 1863; "Syllabus of Lectures on Modern History," 1873; "The Welfare of Science," 1876; "Paper Money Inflation in France," 1876; "The New Germany," 1882; "On Studies in General History and in the History of Civilisation," 1885; "A History of the Doctrine of Comets," 1886; "European Schools of History and Politics," 1887; and "A History of the Welfare of Science with Theology in

Sir William Henry, K.C.B., D., F.R.S., &c., Director of truction, and Assistant Con- ie Navy, was born at Devon- 2, 1845, and educated at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, when that institution was under the direction of the Lords of the Council, the Admiralty supporting it. He graduated at the head of the list of students in 1867, and received the highest diploma as naval architect (Fellow of the Royal School of Naval Architecture); was at once appointed to the Constructive Department at the Admiralty, where he remained until 1883, rising through the various grades to the rank of Chief Constructor. He was appointed Professor of Naval Architecture at the Royal School in 1870, and held that position there and at the Royal Naval College, concurrently with his Admiralty appointment, until 1881. He resigned his position in the Admiralty in March 1883, receiving a special letter of thanks from the Lords Commissioners for past services. From March 1883 to October 1885 he was engaged in the organisation and direction of the shipbuilding department of the Elswick Works of Sir William Armstrong and Co. During that period he designed and built a number of warships for foreign navies, with speeds exceeding any previously attained. He was invited by the Admiralty, in 1885, to assume the office of Director of Naval Construction, which he now holds, in conjunction with that of Assistant Controller of the Navy. He is the professional chief of the Royal Corps of Naval Constructors. During the period he has occupied this position there has been unprecedented activity in shipbuilding for the Royal Navy. The special programme of construction proposed by Lord Northbrook in 1885 was in its early stages at the date of his appointment, and he had responsible charge of its execution. Sir William White has been responsible for the designs and supervision of the construction of all the ships laid down for the Royal Navy since 1885. These number 216, with an aggregate displacement tonnage of 1,200,000 tons, 2,000,000 horse-power, and over 2000 guns. This great fleet cost nearly seventy millions for hulls, propelling machinery, armour, &c.; and the outlay on their armaments probably brings the grand total up to nearly ninety millions sterling. It includes various special programmes of new construction. That under the Imperial Defence Act of 1888 involved an expenditure of £850,000 on eight vessels built for service in Australasian waters, and maintained by grants made by the Colonies. The Naval Defence Act of 1889 provided for the construction of seventy ships at a cost of £22,500,000. These were practically finished in five years, and represented the greatest feat in new construction accomplished up to that time. Subsequently the "Spencer Pro-programme" of 1895, and the "Goschen Programmes," from 1896 to 1899, threw the Naval Defence Act into the shade. The average annual rate of expenditure on new construction has been more than trebled during the period Sir William White has held office, and in the current financial year (1899-1900) is to exceed £8,800,000, whereas, prior to 1887, the yearly average was only about £2,250,000. Amongst the vessels designed by Sir William White are some of the largest, swiftest, and most powerful battleships and cruisers existing in modern war-fleets. His services in connection with the Naval Defence Act were recognised by his appointment as C.B. in 1891. In January 1896 he was created K.C.B. His Majesty the King of Denmark has conferred the distinction of Knight Commander of the Dannebrog on him. The University of Cambridge has given him the honorary degree of Doctor of Science, and the University of Glasgow that of Doctor of Laws. He is also a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh; President of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers; Vice-President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Institution of Naval Architects; Past President of the Institute of Marine Engineers; Member of the Royal Commission for the Paris Exhibition of 1900; Honorary Member of the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland, the North-East Coast Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders, the Liverpool Engineering Society, and the Society of Engineers; Member of the Association Technique Maritime of France, the Royal United Service Institution, and the Royal Institution; Fellow of the Royal School of Naval Architecture, and of the Imperial Institute. He is the author of a "Manual of Naval Architecture," which has become a standard work, and has been translated into Russian, German, and Italian, and officially approved as a textbook for the English, German, Italian, and other navies; also of a "Treatise on Shipbuilding," and of numerous memoirs and papers on the science and practice of shipbuilding, either published separately, or appearing in the Proceedings of the societies of which he is a member. Addresses: The Admiralty, S.W.; 39 Roland Gardens, S.W.; and Athenæum.

WHITEHEAD, Right Rev. Henry, M.A., was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, where he was a Scholar of his College, took a first class in Classical Moderations in 1874, and a first class in the final school of Lit. Hum. in 1877. He graduated B.A. in the same year, and was also elected a Fellow of his College. From 1878 to 1883 he was a Lecturer and Tutor of Trinity College and in 1879. During the year 1879-80 he was an Oxford Don, he was at St. Nicholas, Abingdon, and was appointed Principal of Trinity College, Calcutta, in 1881. He became Examining Officer of the Bishop of Calcutta in 1881, and the Oxford University Member in 1890. Mr. Whitehead was consecrated Bishop of Calcutta in 1899.

WHITEHEAD, Sir James, D.L., J.P., F.S.A., F.R.H.S., Lord of Wilmington Manor, youngest son of the late Mr. Whitehead, of Appleby, Westmorland, born March 2, 1834, and was the Appleby Grammar School, one of the leading schools. He was engaged for many years as a merchant in the City of London. In 1879 he was largely instrumental in founding the Rowland Hill Fund for Aged and Distressed Servants, of which he is a member. In many years he has taken an active part in political matters, his views being an advanced Liberal; and in other constituencies, he was invited to contest the West of Kent. At that time he declined to stand, his health being precarious as to necessitating a voyage; and in 1881 he was elected business. In 1882 a requisition was presented to him by nearly all the electors of Cheap was presented to him, and he was elected Alderman of that ward. In 1884-85 he served as Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and was decorated by the King of Belgium with the Knight Officer of Leopold on his visit to London in connection with the Congo Conference. In the same year the King of Spain conferred on him with the Knight Commander of the Order of Isabella the Catholic, for his services to the Servian Minister in London, and for his warm advocacy of the Federation. In 1885 he was elected to the Fanmakers' Company. Her Majesty's Lieutenant of London; a Deputy-Lieutenant of the county of Westmorland; a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Westmorland, and the County of London. He was Chairman of the Visiting Committee of the Loway Prison, and one of the governors of the City of London Asylum. In many years he was a Governor of the Anne's Bounty, of Christ's Hospital, St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas's, and other hospitals. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of the Royal Society.

Statistical, and other learned. In 1884 he was induced to be Liberal candidate for North id; and after the Redistribution of 1885, and again in 1886, he that constituency, on each offering defeat by a small majority hands of the Hon. William

He is an extensive traveller, visited most of the countries of Egypt and the Soudan, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand,

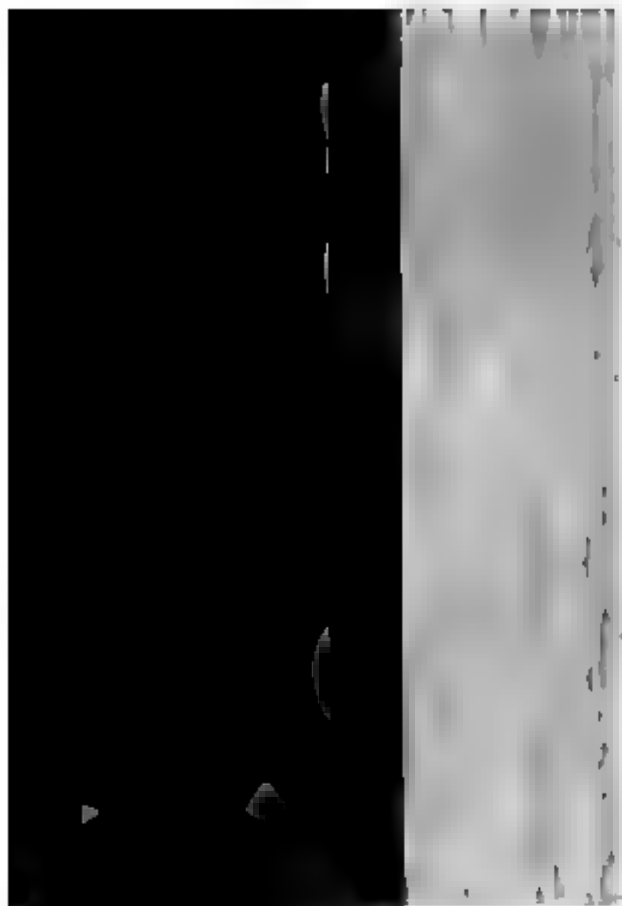

British colonies and dependencies. He is an ardent educationist, in regard to technical, agricultural and higher commercial education. In 1888 he was elected Lord Mayor

On November 9 he abolished the "poor" element, substituted a "state" for a "show," and instead ascertained 10,000 poor people. In the evening his speech in favour of strengthening the navy largely influenced the decisions of the Government in favour of his proposals to that end. On his return from England of Mr. Phelps, then Minister, he gave a farewell banquet of great splendour to distinguished men of law, science, art, and literature.

When the Freedom of the City was conferred upon the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, and later upon Prince of Wales, he gave banquets in their honour. He induced the Corporation to entertain the Shah on his visit to London, and was subsequently decorated with the Persian Order of the Lion and the Sun. In connection with the Paris Exposition of 1889 he sent over seventy-five representatives to examine and report upon the various exhibits connected with the exhibition, particularly in the departments of fine arts, handicrafts, for the instruction of the English workmen and the improvement of the English trade. He also visited the Exposition on special invitation, and was entertained by both the President of the Republic and the President of the Municipal Council of Paris. In return he gave a grand banquet to the Mayor and other distinguished

For his services as President of the British Section of the French Exposition of 1889 he was at the end of the year created with the Commandership of the Order of Honour. Arising out of the Exposition of Paris was the fund which was established for sending poor persons to the colonies and abroad animals to the Pasteur Institute, and for acknowledging in a formal manner the gratuitous services of the Englishmen. In recognition of his services to the Royal Agricultural Society, on acting as Chairman of the Committee, he was presented with the Society's Gold Medal; and for his efforts towards the restoration of orchards in our homesteads and cottage gardens, and education in fruit-growing, he was presented with the Freedom of the Fruit-growers' Company, and was immediately advanced to the office of Master. The great Fruit Show held in the London Guildhall in the autumn of 1890 was organised by him, and in many other ways he has contributed to the advancement of fruit culture in this country. For the famine in China he raised a larger sum than was ever collected for sufferers in any foreign country, with the exception of the fund organised after the capitulation of Paris; and as a mark of appreciation he received a magnificent Tablet of Honour from the Viceroy of the two Kiang provinces of China. As chairman he established and organised a penny-a-week collection in London factories, shops, workshops, and warehouses in aid of the Hospital Saturday Fund, from which there has been a large increase in the income of the hospitals. To meet the deficiency in the equipment of the Metropolitan Volunteers he raised another fund, by which he was enabled to award to all the Metropolitan regiments sums sufficient to complete their equipment and to pay off all debts which had been incurred by them in the purchase of accoutrements. In July 1889 he established the Mansion House Association on Railway and Canal Traffic, to watch over the interests of agriculture and commerce in the revision of railway rates; and after his election to Parliament he took a prominent part in this and other important commercial matters, and was the acknowledged representative of the traders and agriculturists in the matter of railway rates. When in September 1889 the prolonged Dock Strike had dislocated the trade of London, he formed a small Committee of Mediators which was ultimately enabled to bring the conflict to a close. In addition to these more noticeable features, his mayoralty was distinguished by an extraordinary activity in educational, philanthropic, and other meetings of public utility, by an unusual number of banquets and entertainments, and by an entire abstention from political controversy. At the end of his year he was created a baronet on the recommendation of Lord Salisbury; not, as has often happened, in connection with a royal visit, but "for highly valuable services during an eventful mayoralty." In 1889 he was further decorated by the King of Servia with the Grand Cordon of St. Sava for his efforts in the cause of education. In January 1890 he retired from his candidature in North Westmorland; but in March he was induced to accept a unanimous invitation to stand for Leicester, for which he was returned unopposed at the general credibility of the Greek historians, the scientific knowledge of the ancient world, and the Semitic traditions associated with the name of Joseph. He discovered the Raiyan depression in the Egyptian desert, established its identity with the lost lake Moeris of the Ptolemaic maps, and drew plans for its restoration, claiming it as the missing factor in Egyptian prosperity; and, by putting Goshen to the south of Memphis, explains in a new and material sense the Semitic traditions, Hebrew and Arabic. Numerous papers by him, or relating to his works, have been published (see Catalogue of British Museum), in various European languages, including Greek and in Arabic. He is a member of many learned societies, and was created Commander of the Osmanieh, 1888, for his services to Egyptology and exertions on behalf of the better control of the Nile.

WHYMPER, Edward, F.R.S.E., r, and traveller, second son of an engraver and water-colourist, born in London, April 27, educated at Clarendon House under private tuition. He was as a draughtsman on wood, going active to sedentary employment, undertook a series of journeys which usually changed the course of his life. In 1861 he ascended Mont Blanc (reputed to be the highest in France), and discovered from another mountain 500 feet higher, the Pointe des Ecrins—which is of the French Alps, and was first ascended by Mr. Whympers between the years 1861-65, in a series of expeditions remarkable for boldness and success, he ascended one peak after another of mountains till then reputed inaccessible. These expeditions culminated in the ascent of the Mont Blanc (14,780 feet), July 14, 1865, on which his companions, the Rev. Canon Wilson, Mr. Hadow, and Lord Douglas, and one of the guides, were present. In 1867 he travelled in the Alps with the intention of exploring fossiliferous deposits, and, after penetrating into its interior, he was characterised by Sir Archibald Geikie as “truly the ne plus of geological geographical adventure on an individual.” No account of his travels was published, although upon it he obtained cones of magnolia, and specimens of other trees, which demonstrated the former existence of luxuriant vegetation in these high northern mountains. This fine collection of fossil plants described by Professor Heer in the Transactions of the Royal Society in 1868, the first set was secured for the British Museum, South Kensington, where it is now exhibited. In 1871 Mr. Whympers published an account of his Alpine travels under the title “Scrambles in the Alps in the Years 1860-69” (1871). In recognition of this work its author received from the Government of Italy the decoration of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In May 1872 he again left for North Greenland, and returned home among the mountains, returning Nov. 9 to Denmark, bringing with him this, his second exploring expedition, rich collections, among them fine specimens of fossil wood. In the years 1879-80 Mr. Whympers travelled in the Republic of Ecuador, exploring, ascending, and measuring the Great Andes on and near the Equator. On that journey he made the first ascents of Chimborazo (20,517 feet), Sincholagua, Antisana, Cayambe, and Cotacachi. The results were published in 1891-92 in three volumes, namely: (1) “Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator,” containing the narrative of the expedition; (2) “Supplementary Appendix to Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator,” containing descriptions of 133 new genera or species discovered on the journey; and (3) “How to Use the Aneroid Barometer,” giving the results of prolonged investigation into the behaviour of this instrument in the field and under the air-pump. On the publication of these works the Patron's Medal was awarded to Mr. Whympers by the Royal Geographical Society. The botanical collections made on this journey are incorporated in the British Museum, South Kensington, and the antiquities in the British Museum, Bloomsbury. Mr. Whympers is an F.R.S.E.; Corresponding Member of the Société de Géographie of Paris; Hon. Member of the French, Swiss, and Italian Alpine Clubs, and numerous other kindred associations. In 1896 he published “Chamonix and Mont Blanc,” which has already got into its third edition; and in 1897, “The Valley of Zermatt and the Matterhorn.”

WHYTE, Rev. Alexander, D.D., was born at Kirriemuir, Forfarshire, on Jan. 13, 1837, and was educated at Aberdeen University and New College, Edinburgh. After being ordained, he began work as a minister at Free St. John's, Glasgow, in 1866; but four years later he was transferred to Free St. George's, Edinburgh, where he is now the senior minister. Dr. Whyte was Moderator of the Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland for 1898-99. He is the author of: “Commentary on the Shorter Catechism,” 1882; “Characters and Characteristics of William Law,” 1893; “Appreciation of Jacob Behmen,” 1895; “Bunyan Characters,” vols. i.-iii.; “Samuel Rutherford and Some of his Correspondents,” 1894; “Lancelot Andrewes and his Private Devotions,” 1895; “Bible Characters,” 1897; “Father John,” and “An Appreciation of the ‘Religio Medici’,” 1898. He is married to Jane, daughter of the late George Barbour of Bonskeid, Pitlochry, N.B. Address: 7 Charlotte Square, Edinburgh.

He takes an active interest in the advancement of science and the higher education, and has given substantial aid to institutions for the promotion of these objects. For his discovery of the indefinite increase of the magnetic and electric forces from quantities indefinitely small, the Executive Council of the International Inventions Exhibition, London, 1885, awarded him a medal of honour, although not an exhibitor. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, Past President of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, and one of the governing body of the Victoria University and the Owens College, Manchester. WILHELMINA, Hélène Pauline Marie, Queen of the Netherlands, the only child of King William III., by Queen Emma, his second wife, sister to the Duchess of Albany, was born at La Haye on Aug. 31, 1880, and succeeded to the throne, on the death of her father, on Nov. 23, 1890, her mother having shortly before, in consequence of the King's illness, been appointed Queen Regent. Accompanied by her mother, she visited this country some years ago, and spent several weeks in London, during which she visited the more important museums and public buildings of the metropolis. In April 1898 the young Queen and her mother, the Queen Regent, visited Paris, where a very favourable opinion was formed of the youthful sovereign. On August 31 of last year she reached her eighteenth birthday, and thus, according to Dutch law, attained her majority. She made her State entry into Amsterdam on September 6, and on the following day she assumed her regal responsibilities in the Nieuwe Kerk, wherein were gathered a brilliant and representative assembly. Queen Wilhelmina possesses simple tastes, is an accomplished linguist, and an experienced horsewoman.

WILKIN, Sir Walter Henry, K.C.M.G., D.L., was born in 1842, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1875. He was elected Alderman of the Lime Street Ward, in the City of London, in 1888, served the office of Sheriff in 1892, and was Lord Mayor from 1895 to 1896. He is the head of the firm of David Wilkin and Co., yeast importers, was knighted in 1893, and was created a K.C.M.G. in 1896; he is also a Knight Commander of several foreign orders. In 1896, on the occasion of the Hungarian Millennial Exhibition at Budapest, Sir W. Wilkin warmly interested himself in the matter, and originated a Mansion House committee, which materi-my assisted the objects of the undertaking, and to which he gave his strong support. In April 1897 the Emperor of Austria, through the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, Count Deym, sent his best and sincerest thanks to Sir Walter Wilkin, and expressed his conviction that to him was principally due the numerous attendance of British visitors at Budapest at the time of the exhibition. Address: 43 Gloucester Square, Hyde Park, W.

WILKINS, Mary E., author, was born at Brattleborough, Vermont, and was left an orphan at an early age, but was fortunately not thereby reduced to struggle for existence. At the age of sixteen she won a prize of fifty dollars offered by a Boston paper for a children's story. Her principal tales of New England life are: "Pembroke," "Jane Field," "A New England Nod," "Young Lucretia," "Madelon," "A Humble Romance" (perhaps her best book), "A Faraway Melody," "A Pot of Honey," "Jerome," 1897; and "Silence and other Stories," 1898. She travels much in the States, and enjoys the society of cultured Bostonians. She has been described, by perhaps rather enthusiastic admirers, as "the American Loti," but the comparison is not quite fair to either writer. Address: Randolph, Mass.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. George Howard, Bishop of St. Andrews, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1855, M.A. 1859). He was curate of Kensington, 1857-59; perpetual curate of Seaham Harbour, 1859-63; and of Auckland, Durham, 1863-67. In 1867 he was appointed incumbent of St. Peter's, Great Windmill Street, London, and in 1870 he became vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton Square. He was also an Honorary Canon of Truro Cathedral, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of that diocese. He was Select Preacher at Oxford, 1879-81. In January 1883 he was appointed to the See of Truro, which had become vacant by the promotion of Dr. Benson to the Archbishopric of Canterbury, and he was consecrated by the new Primate in St. Paul's Cathedral on April 25. On Feb. 9, 1893, he was elected Bishop of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane. He is the author of several works on devotional and other religious subjects, some of which have passed through very numerous editions. He married, in 1857, a daughter of Lieut.-Colonel Benfield des Vœux. This lady died in 1877. Addresses: Grigmoor, Birnam, Perthshire; and Athenæum.

WILKINSON, James John Garth, F.R.G.S., eldest son of James John Wilkinson, of Durham, born in Acton Street,

Gray's Inn Lane, London, where he was educated at a private school, Hill, and Totteridge, Herts. He was educated for the profession of a lawyer, from the first was "an ardent student." He was the friend of Emerson, whom he profoundly impressed. In "Representative Men" Emerson writes thus: "He (Swedenborg) became a pupil in Mr. Wilkinson's school, a philosophic critic, with a clear understanding and imagination, capable only to Lord Bacon's school. He induced his master's buried ideas to the day, and transferred them to the advantage, from their former life in English, to go round the world, commercial and conquering. His startling reappearance of Swedenborg after a hundred years, in his own time, the least remarkable fact in his life. The works referred to are Swedenborg's scientific works, or "Animal Kingdom," which amount to about half a dozen. "The admirable preliminary to Emerson continues Emerson, "with which Wilkinson has enriched these volumes, all the contemporary philosophy of the land into shade, and leave no room to say on their proper grounds. He translated Swedenborg's "Animal Kingdom," 1843-44, and has written "Swedenborg's Biography," 1849; "The Life and its Connection with Man," 1850; "Ministry of Health," about 1851; "Licensed Medicine," a pamphlet; "Provisions from the Spirit," 1852; "The Cure, Arrest, and Isolation of the Pox, by a New Method; and the Treatment of Erysipelas, and other Inflammations: with a Postscript on Civil Freedom," 1864; "Our Society," 1865; also "Human Science," 1865; "Evil, and its Works, and its Prevention and its Works and Science," 1865; "The Greater Origins and the Death," 1865; "Revelations of the Church of the Ancients," 1865; "Soul is Form and doth the Chapters in Psychology," 1865; "African," 1891; "Epidemic Visitation," 1892; "The New Jerusalem and the Old Jerusalem, the Service of the Jewish Church," 1892; "Sons of Revelation," "Swedenborg the Doctors," and "The Victories of Jesus Christ," "Affections of Armed Powers," "School of Little Nations," and "of Edda called Voluspá: its Spiritual Correspondence," 1892.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. Thomas, D.D., Roman Catholic

d Newcastle. He is the son of John Wilkinson, Esq., Newcastle, and its first County Recorder, who married Miss Elizabeth, heiress of Harperley Park, in the county of Durham. He married Harperley on April 5, 1825. His education was in the house of his father at Ovingham, on the river Tyne. At the age of thirteen he went to Harrow. Having finished his studies at Harrow four years at the University of Cambridge. His intention then was to enter the Church of England, but he joined a community of young men at the Church of St. Andrew, Leeds. After many doubts as to his position, unsatisfied by the views of Dr. Pusey and others, he, with several of his friends, left St. Saviour's, and was received into the Catholic Church on December 1, 1845. After a course of theological studies at St. Andrew he was ordained priest at Harrow, near Durham, on December 1, 1845. From that time till 1871 he led a life of constant toil among the poor, first at Wolsingham, and then at Harrow, both places in the immediate neighbourhood of his father's estate. He was elected Canon of the Cathedral of Durham. At length, in 1871, on account of the constant labours of his ministerial life his health broke down, and he was obliged to seek absolute rest. His health having been partially restored he was again brought to the Bishop of Hexham, who had died in 1886, and he, the Vicar-Capitular, was elected Canon of the diocese during the year 1887. In the election of the latter the unanimous Chapter fell on Canon Willard, from that time governed till the arrival of the new Canon, Dr. O'Callaghan, in March 1888, as Vicar-General and Provost. In consequence of the death of Dr. O'Callaghan, Provost Willard was in May 1888 appointed by the Bishop-Auxiliary with administrative powers, and was consecrated at Harrow on July 25. On the retirement of Dr. O'Callaghan he was made Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle, and he was installed in his Cathedral Church at Newcastle on Feb. 18, 1890. Since 1890 he has been President of St. Cuthbert's Society, and this is his permanent

Sir Samuel, Bart., M.D., late President of the Royal College of Physicians, born at Camberwell in 1824, is the second son of Joseph Barber Wilks, Treasurer of the East India Company. He was educated at University College, London. He was created M.D. of the London University in 1850, became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1856, a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1870, Physician to Guy's Hospital and Lecturer on Medicine, President of the Pathological Society, a Member of the Senate of the University of London and of the General Medical Council, President of the Royal College of Physicians, Physician Extraordinary to the Queen, and Physician to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Sir Samuel Wilks is the author of "Lectures on Pathological Anatomy," and "Lectures on Diseases of the Nervous System," and a "Biographical History of Guy's Hospital." He was formerly for many years editor of the "Guy's Hospital Reports." He was member of the Medical Commission on the Contagious Diseases Act, 1868; a member of the Royal Commission on Contagious Diseases Act, 1871; was formerly Examiner in Medicine at the Royal College of Surgeons and at the University of London. Dr. Wilks has contributed papers on Alcoholism and Vivisection to the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. He delivered the Harveian Oration at the Royal College of Physicians June 26, 1879. He was created a Baronet in 1897, and in March 1899 was succeeded in the Presidency of the Royal College of Physicians by Dr. William Selby Church. Address: 72 Grosvenor Street, W.

WILLARD, E. S., was born at Brighton in 1853, and from an early age was bent on becoming an actor. His family had a certain old-fashioned horror of the theatre, and it was with much difficulty that the stage-struck boy induced them to let him enter upon a dramatic career. Mr. Willard obtained his first engagement at the Theatre Royal, Weymouth, and served an orthodox seven years' apprenticeship as a "stock" actor, playing every imaginable part from Macbeth to Claude Melnotte. During this period of his life he met Mr. Sothorn at Glasgow, and went on tour with him, playing Captain de Boots in "Dundreary Married and Settled," Sir Edward Trenchard in "Our American Cousin," and Mr. Smith in "David Garrick." On Boxing Day, 1875, he made his first appearance before a London audience, at Covent Garden, as Alfred Highflyer in "A Roland for an Oliver." He was then for some years in the country, played a variety of parts, and fell in with such actors as Charles Mathews, Phelps, Toole, Helen Faucit, and Barry Sullivan. In 1881 he returned to London, and took part with Miss Helen Barry in a series of matinées at the Imperial Theatre. In the September of that year he was engaged to play Clifford Armitage in "The Lights of London," at the Princess's. This was "the first of the long series of gentlemanly villains that promised to claim Mr. Willard as their perpetual impersonator." He next played Philip Royston in "The Romany Rye," and the Spider in "The Silver King" at the same theatre, Mr. Wilson Barrett taking the title-rôle in the latter play. This latter part made Mr. Willard famous; and he followed it up by such notable impersonations as the wicked lawyer in "Hoodman Blind," the title-rôle in "Jim the Penman," and Geoffrey Delamayn in "Man and Wife." In 1888 Mr. Willard became lessee of the Shaftesbury Theatre, and as an "actor-manager" achieved a popular success in Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's "Middleman," in which play he created the part of Cyrus Blenkarn, the potter. "The Middleman" was succeeded by two other notable plays, "Dick Venables" and "Judah," in both of which Mr. Willard appeared in the title-rôle. On Nov. 10, 1890, Mr. Willard, having taken an engagement under Mr. A. M. Palmer, the New York manager, appeared in "The Middleman" at Palmer's Theatre, N.Y. Between this year and 1894 he made three consecutive tours in the United States, adding Hamlet to his repertory at Boston in October 1893, and bringing out "John Needham's Double," by Joseph Hatton, "Wealth," by Henry Arthur Jones, "A Fool's Paradise," by Sydney Grundy, and "The Professor's Love Story," by J. M. Barrie. In the summer of 1894 he returned to London, and brought out the latter play at the Comedy and then at the Garrick Theatre, where it enjoyed a long run. At the same theatre, in August 1895, he appeared in "Alabama." He pays constant professional visits to the States, and has lately been in Australia for a considerable time.

WILLETT, Alfred, F.R.C.S., received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, at which he is now Surgeon and Demonstrator of Practical Surgery and joint Lecturer on Surgery, as well as Warden of the College. He became Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Eng., in 1862, Member of Council in 1887, and was Vice-President in 1897, when he delivered the Bradshaw Lectures on "The Correction of certain Deformities by Operative Measures upon Bones." He is Surgeon to St. Luke's Hospital for Lunatics, and to the Evelina Hospital, Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., &c., and has been Examiner in Surgery at the University of Cambridge and the Royal College of Physicians. He has contributed on cases of malformation to Roy. Med. Chir. Soc. Address: 10, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C. 4.

WILLIAM II., Frederick Victor Albert, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany, is the second son of Her Majesty the Queen Victoria, being the son of the Emperor Frederick III. He was born in Berlin, Jan. 26, 1859, educated at Cassel, and passed through the ordinary discipline of the Prussian military system until 1877, when he entered the University of Bonn. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Emperor Frederick, June 15, 1888. His Majesty was married in Berlin, Jan. 10, 1881, to Augusta Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, a niece of Prince Consort Albert. He has six children. In August 1890, the Emperor visited the Queen at Osborne. On his return to Berlin in 1889 he received the King of Sweden, the King of Denmark, the King of Italy, the Emperor of Austria, and the Czar of Russia. Subsequently he visited Athens, and on the occasion of the marriage of his sister-in-law, Sophie, to the Crown Prince of Greece, he proceeded to Constantinople on a visit to the Sultan. In 1890 he made state visits to Heligoland and the Netherlands, and then crossed to England, accompanied by the Empress. The Imperial pair were splendidly entertained in London and the country. The Emperor was presented with the Freedom of the City. In 1892 the Emperor visited the late Czar at Kiel, and the visit was of a cordial character. In July 1893 he visited Norway, and took part in the expedition, and in the autumn he visited Cowes and took part in the regatta, at the same time visiting the Queen at Osborne. In October 1893 he attended the silver wedding of the King and Queen of Italy, and visited Leo XIII. In the autumn he crossed to Cowes and won the Queen's Cup. During 1894 he visited Italy at Venice, and in April 1894 he came to Cowes, before, victorious in the Queen's Cup. He afterwards visited Aldershot, and was present at the shooting. While at Aldershot he called on the Empress of the French. On his return the Emperor accepted the resignation of Count von Caprivi, whom he had chosen to succeed Bismarck. He is, indeed, in no sense dependent on particular ministers. He aims at ernment in a manner unusual in this of constitutionalism. Thus he has ated many laws, notably those for the session of drunkenness and immorality, ight before the Reichstag in 1892; and his frequent speeches to the army or to subjects he has shown himself a conscious imitator and ardent admirer of his like and despotic ancestry. In a famous characteristically Prussian speech, delivered in 1892 at the annual banquet of the Brandenburg Diet, he urged all grumblers against him and his government to shake the dust of the Fatherland off their feet as soon as possible, and at the same time reaffirmed his determination to press forward "on the path Heaven had laid out for him," knowing that "He, our old ally, Rossbach and Dennewitz, will not now leave me in the lurch." On a subsequent occasion he urged the sons of Prussia to trustfully await the results which I may proceed in achieving in the course of the some years to come." The Emperor, in addition to being a firm governor, is a man the most varied interests and activities. In 1890 he inaugurated an International Labour Conference. In 1892 he interested himself in Primary Education, and introduced a Primary Education Bill, which he afterwards abandoned in the face of violent popular opposition. In 1893 he let it plainly understood that he intended a new Army Bill to become law. Army matters naturally interest him more than others. He has constantly issued orders of the day to the army, or made them speeches tending to keep up an intensely martial spirit among them. A typical rescript (January 1895) bids them to the standards of certain regiments and in the Franco-German war with leaves on public occasions. But he is at bottom no hater of France or consumer of things French. At the time of President Carnot's death he showed his sincere sympathy with France by setting free two French officers imprisoned as spies in German fortresses, and he is reported to be a constant reader of French literature. German colonial politics have partially engrossed his attention during recent years. In 1890 he personally took possession of Heligoland, ceded to him by England, and considered it of great strategic importance. He has also concluded commercial treaties with Austria, Switzerland, Italy, and other powers. To the cause of German culture, especially science, he has been a liberal patron, and in recent years has ennobled many prominent scientific men. He is a good violinist, and has composed a song, "Sang an Ægir," which has had an enormous sale. He has even ventured into the domain of geology, and has published a collection of sermons delivered by him to the men of his yacht, Hohenzollern, and in February 1892 he presented a richly-bound copy of the same to the Pope. In January 1895 the Emperor delivered a speech at a parliamentary soirée on the necessity for enlarging the navy, a subject very near his heart. In the following month he read an address to the Military Association of Berlin, referring particularly to the need for co-operation between land and sea forces, and again emphasising the need of an enlarged navy, especially with reference to the equipment of cruisers. The Emperor showed his interest in the agricultural movement by his severe reproof of a deputation of the Agrarian League for their methods of agitation, and by a promise that, if their tactics were changed, he would take a fatherly interest in them. He visited Cowes for the regatta week in August, being attended by a squadron of the German navy. In January 1896, subsequent to the defeat and capture of Dr. Jameson in the lamentable fiasco in the Transvaal, the Emperor caused much ill-feeling in this country by sending a congratulatory and laudatory telegram to President Krüger on the political situation. The relations between England and Germany were, for a time, somewhat strained. In April 1896 the Emperor made state visits to King Humbert at Venice and the Emperor Francis Josef at Vienna, being warmly received on both occasions. A rumour that the Emperor intended to visit Cowes for the regatta caused much angry demonstration in the Berlin journals. Dining at Brandenburg, the Emperor made an important speech, in which, in an unmistakable manner, he showed himself to be a socialist. He asserted that his great object was to continue the work of his grandfather, and bind closer the threads which knit the empire, and declared that he, the Emperor, would clasp hands with any man, be he workman or other, provided he were willing to assist his king in so great a work. In April the Emperor paid a semi-state visit to Vienna, where he was again well received by the Emperor Francis Josef, and the populace. On his return journey he was present at the birthday celebrations of the King of Saxony. The Berlin journals quite gratuitously gave this visit to Vienna a momentous political significance, which subsequent events have shown to be unwarranted. It was stated that as the visit was paid on the eve of the Austrian Emperor's departure for St. Petersburg, clear evidence was furnished of identity of aim between the three powers with regard to the Eastern Question. On August 25 the Emperor unveiled, with great ceremony, a statue of the Emperor William I. at Magdeburg. He visited Kiel on December 15, 1897, for the purpose of bidding farewell to Prince Henry of Prussia on his departure for China. This event was the occasion of a remarkable speech relative to German commerce and German outposts generally. During September and October 1898 extensive preparations were made for the Emperor's proposed visit to Palestine. The imperial party arrived in Turkey in the early days of October, and were welcomed with great éclat, and many brilliant scenes were enacted during the progress of the visit, which had the temporary effect of drawing together the two military despotisms, of which Kaiser and Sultan are the respective heads. The ostensible object of the pilgrimage was to lay the foundation stone of a Lutheran church at Jerusalem, for which purpose the German Gustavus Adolphus Society placed 30,000 marks at the Emperor's disposal. On October 25 the Imperial cortège entered Jerusalem, and spent days visiting the various places of interest about the city. The church was consecrated by the Emperor on the 21st with much solemnity, and the spectacle was said to be one of the most impressive in modern times. The Emperor and party left Damascus on Nov. 5, 1898, and travelling via Malta and Crete returned overland to Potsdam. In the summer of 1899 the Emperor emphasised his desire to visit Paris during the French Exhibition of 1900 by visiting a French man-of-war and commenting eulogistically on the French navy.

WILLIAMS, Charles, "the doyen of the Press," as he has been called, was born at Coleraine, Ireland, May 4, 1838, of a family originally of Penrhyn and Worcestershire. He was educated at Belfast Academy under Dr. Bryce, and at Greenwich under Dr. Goodwin, and was appointed leader-writer and reviewer on the Evening Herald in 1859. He became a special correspondent of the Standard in October 1859, and was senior special correspondent of that journal till Jan. 1, 1870, when he accepted the first editorship of the Evening Standard, but he resigned in 1872 to resume his old post. He retired from the Standard in 1884 in consequence of a change of management. Mr. Williams saw some service while young in Central America, and in 1859-65 was a devoted volunteer, while, as a holiday task, he accompanied the headquarters of the army of the Loire at the beginning of the second phase of the Franco-German War, and was one of the first two correspondents in Strasburg after the fall of that city in 1870, and he witnessed the final fighting in front of Le Mans in January 1871, while on a brief holiday. In 1877 he went to Armenia as correspondent of Ghazi Mukhtar Pasha on an account of his expedition entitled "The Armenian Diary of the Campaign in Armenia and Kurdistan." London, afterwards as a special correspondent of the defence, by Mukhtar Pasha, lines of Constantinople and headquarters of General Bakhitchev, at the moment when the treaty of peace was signed. He subsequently undertook the task of recording the proceedings of the Berlin Congress, and then proceeded to Afghanistan, to Candahar, and wrote for the Frontier Transport in India. He accompanied the Nile Expedition, and attracted some attention by a series of articles. Charles Wilson for his conduct was told off to advance up the Nile. He was the only Englishman to accompany the Bulgarians under Prince Ferdinand in the 1885 campaign against the Greeks in the spring of 1886. He accompanied General Gatacre in 1887, and joined the British Brigade in returning thither in the same year. He is the senior correspondent of the Standard, and supplied that paper with a series of articles of Omurman, &c., although he was forced to complain of the censorship of war correspondence. Altogether, he has taken part in nine campaigns. Among his short treatises on "English Military History," "Life of Sir Evelyn Wood," &c. He has supplied that paper with a series of articles of Omurman, &c., although he was forced to complain of the censorship of war correspondence. Altogether, he has taken part in nine campaigns. Among his short treatises on "English Military History," "Life of Sir Evelyn Wood," &c. His latest publication is a book on "The Life of Sir Evelyn Wood," published by Messrs. G. Routledge & Co. for a time the managing editor of the Evening News, and was elected Chairman of the London Institute of Journalists for the year 1898, during which the Conference met in London. He was also chosen as President of the London Institute of Journalists, in which he was a founder, in 1898. His permanent address: Constitution Hill, Northumberland Avenue.

WILLIAMS, C. Greville, the son of S. H. Williams, was born at Cheltenham on May 1, 1841. He was educated privately near Cheltenham, and then at St. John's College, Oxford, where he was a student to Dr. Anderson. He studied Chemistry in the University of

for several years aided the progress of his chemical investigations. Eventually he became an assistant to Lord Playfair, who was at that time Professor of Chemistry at Edinburgh. At the present time Photometric Engineer to the Gas Light and Coke Co. Williams has published numerous papers which have appeared in the Transactions of the Royal Society of London, Edinburgh, the Quarterly Journal of the Chemical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, Comptes Rendus de l'Académie des Sciences, &c. Amongst his scientific contributions may be mentioned the discovery of lepidine and numerous other compounds of cyanine, and the hydrocarbon

He has of late years interested himself in Egyptology. Address: 36 North Avenue, Wimbledon.

WILLIAMS, Dawson, M.D., F.R.C.P., received his medical education at University College Hospital, and graduated M.D. in 1871 with great distinction. He was House Physician and Obstetrical and Ophthalmic Assistant at University College Hospital, Registrar and Pathologist at St. Bartholomew's Hospital for Children, and Clinical Assistant at the Brompton Hospital. He is at present attached to the East London Hospital for Women, as well as Fellow of the Royal Society, and member of other societies. He was appointed Editor of the British Medical Journal in 1881 to the late Mr. Ernest Hart and has published "Medical Jurisprudence of Infancy and Childhood," 1898, and on "Attenuation of Virus and its Effect on Vaccination" in Cheyne's "Bacteriology and its Application to Disease" (New Sydenham Society), as well as various contributions to the Transactions of the Pathological Society. Address: 101 Grosvenor Street, W., &c.

WILLIAMS, Sir Edward Leader, (Inst.M.E., and M.Inst.C.E.), was born April 28, 1828. His father, the late Sir Edward Williams, was the engineer of the Severn Navigation, and it was through his works that he began his professional career, which has from the first been devoted to river and canal improvements. He worked under his father until 1850, when he was appointed Engineer on the Great Northern Railway, the line being cut through Lincolnshire. He was then employed on the improvement of Shoreham Harbour, and he was for several years attached to the works of the Admiralty Pier at Portsmouth. In 1856 Mr. Leader Williams was appointed Engineer to the River Weaver where he completed important and extensive works, during the latter course of which he was appointed Engineer to the Bridgewater Navigation Company, which had bought the Bridgewater Canals and the Mersey and Irwell Navigation from the Bridgewater Trustees. During his tenancy of this new position Mr. Leader Williams had under consideration the possibility of so improving the Mersey and Irwell Navigation as to open it to large sea-going vessels. On June 27, 1882, a meeting was held at the house of the late Mr. Daniel Adamson, which led to the formation of a Provisional Committee "to consider the question of providing a waterway for large vessels from Manchester to the sea." Mr. Hamilton H. Fulton, C.E., and Mr. Leader Williams were subsequently invited to assist in a preliminary survey of the Irwell and Mersey Navigation, and were then appointed as joint engineers to the projected undertaking. But they differed considerably as to the best course to be pursued; Mr. Fulton advocating a tidal waterway, whilst Mr. Leader Williams suggested a scheme for using the tidal estuary for some distance, and from that point cutting a canal with four sets of locks to raise ships gradually to the level of Manchester (i.e. some sixty feet above the sea). Mr. Williams's scheme at last triumphed, and on Sept. 26, 1882, it was resolved to construct what is now known as the Manchester Ship Canal. For twelve years, till the formal opening of the canal by the Queen in the summer of 1894, Mr. Leader Williams was its chief engineer, and is now the consulting engineer. He had to surmount every variety of obstacle, but the triumphant completion of his vast design marks him out as one of the ablest and most practical men in his profession. He received the honour of knighthood in July 1894. Address: The Oaks, Altrincham, Cheshire.

WILLIAMS, Sir George, was born in 1821, and was educated at Tiverton Grammar School. He is a member of the firm of Hitchcock, Williams, & Co., warehousemen, and he holds the position of President of both the Young Men's Christian Association and of the Band of Hope Union. He received the honour of knighthood in 1894, and was married, in 1853, to Helen, daughter of George Hitchcock. Address: 13 Russell Square, W.C.

WILLIAMS, Sir John, Bart., M.D., F.R.C.P., is the third son of David Williams, of Blaenllynant, Carmarthenshire, and was born on Nov. 6, 1840. He was educated at the Normal College, Swansea, and at University College, London. He took the M.B. degree at the London University in 1866, and the M.D. in the following year, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London in 1879. He is a Fellow of and Emeritus Professor of Midwifery at University College, and is Consulting Obstetric Physician to University College Hospital. Formerly President, and still a Fellow, of the Obstetrical Society, he is also a member of numerous other medical societies, and he is an Examiner in Midwifery at the Conjoint Board in England. Sir John Williams holds the appointments of Physician to H.R.H. Princess Beatrice, and of Physician-Accoucheur to H.R.H. the Duchess of York. He is the author of "Structure of the Mucous Membrane of the Uterus, and its Periodical Changes," and "Cancer of the Uterus"; and has contributed many articles to obstetric journals. He was married, in 1872, to Mary, daughter of Richard Hughes, of Enistawe. Addresses: 63 Brook Street, W.; Plas Llanstephen, Carmarthenshire; and Athenæum.

WILLIAMS, John Carvell, M.P. for the Mansfield Division of Nottinghamshire, of Crouch End, Hornsey, is the eldest son of the late Mr. John Allen Williams, of Putney, by his marriage with Mary, daughter of the late Mr. John Carvell, of Lambeth, and was born in 1821. He was educated at a private school, and afterwards spent some years with a firm of proctors in Doctors Commons, where he acquired considerable knowledge of ecclesiastical matters. It was the opposition of the Nonconformists to the Factories Education Bill of Sir James Graham in 1843, and afterwards to the Minutes of Council on Education, which first brought Mr. Williams into prominence. In 1847, when but twenty-six years of age, he was appointed Secretary to the "British Anti-State Church Association," afterwards designated the "Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control," but popularly known as the "Liberation Society." That office he held for thirty years, and on his resigning in 1877 he was appointed Chairman of the Society's Parliamentary Committee, and Deputy-Chairman of the Executive Committee; and in 1898 he became Acting Chairman. At the general election of 1885 he stood as the Liberal candidate for the newly-created Southern Division of Nottingham, and was returned by a majority of 363. During the short time that Parliament lasted he succeeded in passing the Act for extending the hours within which marriages may be celebrated from twelve (noon) to three o'clock in the afternoon. At the dissolution of 1886 he was defeated by the Conservative candidate whom he had previously opposed; but shortly after he was invited to come the Liberal candidate for the Mansfield Division of Nottingham. In the prospect of the retirement of Mr. Foljambe. At the election he was returned for that constituency by a large majority of 2496. In 1885 the Liberal party were defeated, but he was reduced to 1385, though he lost 61 fewer votes. He is an active member of the Committee of the Dissenters for protecting the civil liberties of the Dissenters, and the Congregationalists, and other public bodies, and is President of the Hornsey Liberal Association. Ecclesiastically he is a Congregationalist, and has been deacon of churches at Surbiton and Stroud Green. He is one of the authors of "Disestablishment of the Imperial Parliament Series," by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P. He has also written several pamphlets on the Burials question, and various other tracts, and is a contributor to the public journals, besides being one of the editors of the Liberator. Mr. Carvell Williams married the third daughter of the late Mr. Goodman, of Hornsey, by whom he has had five sons and three daughters, of whom only one survives. Address: Serjeant's Inn, Fleet Street. Residence: Rise Gardens, N.

WILLIAMS, Joseph Powell, J.P., is the son of Mr. William Williams, Vinegar Brewery, Worcester. He was born in that city on Nov. 18, 1825, and educated at the Edgbaston School, Birmingham. He entered the office of Mr. Graham, of Birmingham, and shortly afterwards was sent to America on the business of the firm. On returning to England he settled in London, and accepted an appointment under Sir Rowland Hill, the Secretary of the Post-Office. While employed he had a share in establishing the Post Office Savings Bank, and began also to read for the Bar. In this direction were, however, his views by his promotion to the Surveyor-General's Office. In 1873 Mr. Powell returned to Birmingham, and devoted himself with the work of the Liberal party. In 1877 he was elected Councillor, and soon afterwards Chairman of the Finance Committee, in which position he held for many years, proving himself of inestimable value to the City Corporation. He was frequently elected a City Alderman, and rendered great assistance in establishing the Birmingham Fire Brigade upon a permanent basis. Until the political crisis of 1886 Mr. Williams was Hon.

ingham Liberal Association and National Liberal Federation; he then Chairman of the Executive of the Liberal Union, and Vice-President of Birmingham Liberal-Unionist Association. He has represented South Wales in the House of Commons as Unionist member since 1886, and acted as Financial Secretary to the Office since 1895. He is the author of pamphlets on "County Government," "The Ballot Act," and of an article in the Nineteenth Century on "The Effect of Ground Rents." He is married to the daughter of the late S. A. Bindon. Address: 6 Great George Street, Westminster, S.W.

WILLIAMS, The Right Hon. Sir John Bowdler Vaughan, B.A., Lord of the Court of Appeal, is the son of the late Right Hon. Sir Edward Williams, formerly one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas, born in 1838. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, of which he was a student, and where he obtained B.A., and was called to the Middle Temple in Michaelmas Term, 1861. He chose the South-Eastern (Home) Circuit, also practising as a legal pleader, and at the Surrey Assizes. He received the honour of silk in 1890. When the Combing-up Court was established in accordance with the Act of 1890 he was appointed to preside over that Court. His calmness and precision in cases of great interest won him so high a reputation that a rumour to the effect that he would be removed elsewhere called forth many protests from the press. In 1897 he was appointed a Lord of the Court of Appeal in the room of Lord Macnaghten, and resigned. He is the author of a work on the Law of Bankruptcy, and joint editor of "Williams on Executors." Sir R. Vaughan married, in 1865, Laura Susanna, daughter of the late Mr. Edmund Netley, Surrey. Addresses: 6 Grosvenor Road, S.W.; High Ashe's Farm, Surrey; and Athenæum.

WILLIAMS, Right Rev. Watkin Jones, D.D., is the second son of the late Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn, of Bodelwyddan, Flintshire, another having been the only son. Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn was born in 1845, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1870, and the following year. Ordained in 1872, he was Curate of Rhos-Llaner-fawr, Flintshire, for two years, and in 1872 he became Vicar of Bodelwyddan, Flintshire. He was appointed Chaplain to the Bishop of St. Asaph in 1889, and in the same year also became Archdeacon and Canon of St. Asaph. In 1892 Mr. Williams was offered, and accepted, the Deanery of St. Asaph, whilst only a few months ago he was appointed Bishop of Bangor in succession to Dr. Lloyd, who has been compelled to resign in consequence of illness. He is the author of "The Duties of Churchwardens," 1890; and he was married, in 1879, to Alice, daughter of the late General Monckton. Address: The Palace, Bangor.

WILLIAMSON, Emeritus Professor Alexander William, Ph.D., F.R.S., LL.D. Dublin and Edinburgh, born May 1, 1824, was educated chiefly in his father's house, by masters in London, Paris, and Dijon, and for a very short time at Kensington Grammar School, and at foreign schools. From the age of seventeen he studied in the Universities of Heidelberg and Giessen under Gmelin and Liebig. At Giessen he published his first chemical researches. He afterwards spent three years in Paris studying the higher mathematics. In 1849 he was appointed Professor of Practical Chemistry in University College, London; and in 1855, Professor of Chemistry in the same college, while still retaining the chair of Practical Chemistry. Soon after his first appointment at University College, Professor Williamson published his researches on "Etherification and the Constitution of Salts." The result of these researches had a considerable influence on the theories of chemical action, and they have been since adopted by the chief English and foreign chemists. For these important and successful labours the Royal Medal of the Royal Society was awarded to him in 1862. He has twice been President of the Chemical Society. In 1873 he was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. The same year he was elected Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society, a Corresponding Member of the French Academy, and a Fellow of the Berlin Chemical Society. In 1874 he was elected Treasurer of the British Association on the retirement of Mr. Spottiswoode. In November 1875 the Royal Academy of Science at Berlin elected him a Corresponding Member of the Section of Physics and Mathematics. He was appointed member of the Senate of the University of London. In April 1876 he was appointed Chief Gas Examiner to the City of London. The University of Dublin conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878, since which date the University of Edinburgh turned to England in 1893, and doing temporary work at Merchant Street at Rugby, he was appointed in 1894 to the Headmastership of College, Sussex. He married, Maria Mary, daughter of Dr. Henry of George, South Africa. Adjoining College, Sussex.

N, Rear-Admiral Sir Arthur K.C.B., V.C., was born on March 1 entered the navy in 1855. He was midshipman in H.M.S. Algiers in the Sea during the Russian war, and was present at the bombardment of the pol. He received the Crimean War medals. His next war service was in the Albatross, as midshipman of H.M.S. Albatross. There he took part in the capture of Peiho forts and landed with his brigade at the attack on Canton, where he was awarded the China Medal with two clasps. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1861, Commander in 1873, Captain in 1880. As Captain of the Albatross he was present at the bombardment of Alexandria in 1882, and received the Egyptian Medal. He received the Egyptian Medal with clasp, and the Order of the Medjidie third class. In the Soudan he was 4 Admiral Wilson served in the 4th Brigade, and was present at the battle of El Teb. During this fight he performed an act of gallantry which Sir Buller described as one of the most glorious he had ever witnessed. A gap in the square, and five or six enemy seeing it, rushed forward, to pierce the ranks. There Wilson advanced to meet them, breaking his sword in his effort to bring them down, would not retire, and held his ground, knocking them with his fists. Either by a miracle or the rising nature of his attack he escaped with a few wounds, and the square rescued him. He was mentioned in the despatches, and received the V.C. and a Suakim and El Teb clasps for his services. He was also presented with a sword by the torpedo officers of H.M.S. Albatross in admiration of his gallantry at the battle of El Teb." He was appointed aide-de-camp to the Queen in 1887, and was created a C.B. in 1887, the year also he became Assistant Secretary of Torpedoes at the Admiralty. K.C.B., 1897. He was promoted Rear-Admiral in 1895, and commanded the torpedo squadron at the review of that year. In the year of 1896 he was Second-in-Command of the Reserve Fleet, and was appointed Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty and Controller of the Navy in August 1897. He is also the inventor of double-barrelled torpedo tubes. Address: 15 Ermin's Mansions, S.W.

WILSON, Sir Charles Rivers, G.C.M.G., C.B., was born in London, Feb. 19, 1831, and educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford. He was appointed Clerk in the Treasury in February 1856; was Private Secretary consecutively to Mr. James Wilson and Mr. George Alexander Hamilton, Secretaries of the Treasury; Acting Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, from August 1867 to February 1868; Private Secretary to Mr. Lowe, Chancellor of the Exchequer, from December 1868 to April 1873; and was appointed Comptroller-General of the National Debt Office in April 1873. Mr. Wilson represented (with the late Professor Graham) her Majesty's Government at the International Coinage Commission in 1867, and acted as Secretary to the Royal Commission appointed to examine the question of an International Coinage in 1868. On the return of Mr. Cave to England from his financial mission to Egypt, Mr. Rivers Wilson, at the request of the Khedive, went to Egypt in March 1876, with the view of his acceptance of a financial post in that country; but after the issue of the decree of May 7, 1876, by which an arbitrary readjustment of the Public Debt of Egypt was proposed, he returned to England, and resumed his post at the National Debt Office. On July 29, 1876, he was appointed one of the British Government Administrators of the Suez Canal Company; on Jan. 22, 1877, he was appointed a Royal Commissioner for the Paris Exhibition of 1878; on March 30, 1878, he was appointed Vice-President, and in the absence of M. de Lesseps, acted as President, of an International Commission of Inquiry, instituted by the Khedive at the instigation of the foreign governments, to examine the resources of Egypt, and propose measures for remedying the financial disorder in that country. The Report of the Commission, Aug. 19, 1878, traced the whole of the mischief to the system of personal administration by the Viceroy, and proposed that his Highness should surrender his estates and those of his family to make good the deficit in the revenue, and pay the large floating debt of the country. The immediate consequence of the presentation of their Report was an acceptance by the Khedive of all its conclusions, and a formal announcement to Mr. Rivers Wilson of the determination of his Highness to abandon his actual system of government for one more in conformity with European experience, and to govern in future by means of a

WILSON, James, American political leader and agriculturist, was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, Aug. 16, 1835. He went to America with his parents in 1852, settling in Connecticut. In 1855 he removed to Iowa, locating in Tama County, where he engaged in farming. He served three terms in the State Legislature, being Speaker of the Lower House on the third occasion. He was elected to Congress in 1872, and served in the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-eighth Congresses. From 1870 to 1874 he was a Regent of the State University, and for several years has been Director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, and Professor of Agriculture at the Iowa Agricultural College at Ames. He became Secretary of Agriculture in President McKinley's Cabinet, Mar. 4, 1897.

WILSON, The Ven. James Maurice, was born on Nov. 6, 1836. His father, the Rev. E. Wilson, who was a double first-class at Cambridge in 1825, and a Fellow of St. John's, was for many years Vicar of Nocton, Lincoln, and honorary Canon of Lincoln. Mr. Wilson was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at Sedbergh Grammar School, and went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1855. He was bracketed for the second Bell Scholarship in 1856 with Henry Sidgwick, who was afterwards Senior Classic. He took his degree in 1859 as Senior Wrangler. He was appointed by Dr. Temple to the post of Natural Science Master at Rugby, and in that capacity, and subsequently as Senior Mathematical Master, he worked at Rugby for twenty years. During those years he was an occasional contributor to the Geological and Astronomical Societies' journals, and founded the Temple Observatory at Rugby. His chief astronomical work is one in which he was associated with two other amateurs, the "Handbook of Double Stars." In 1879 he was offered the Headmastership of Clifton College, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Percival. Since that time until 1890, when he retired from that position, he had been more before the world as the Headmaster of a large and very active school, and as a preacher and writer, than as a scientific man. A volume of his school sermons in two series, of which the second appeared in 1891, has been published by Macmillan; also volumes of Essays and Addresses and Contributions to Religious Thought. He is understood to have taken much interest in Bristol, in its religious and philanthropic and educational work. He was Chaplain to the present Archbishop of Canterbury from 1885 to 1890. In 1890 he was presented to the living of Rochdale, in the Diocese of Manchester, and in the same year became Archdeacon of Manchester. He has since published (Paul) a volume of "Rochdale Sermons." Many separate addresses are published by the S.P.C.K. Address: The Rectory, Rochdale.

WILSON, William Edward, J.P., is the son of John Wilson, of Daramona House, Streete, Westmeath, and was born on July 1, 1841. He was educated privately, and devoted himself to investigation connected with Astronomy and Natural Science. He built a private observatory at Daramona in 1871, and there he constructed a larger observatory, including also a physical laboratory and a mechanical workshop. Mr. Wilson has published numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and has also contributed to the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society. He served the office of Sheriff for Westmeath in 1881, and was married to Carolina Ada, daughter of R. C. Granville, in 1866. He resides at Daramona, Streete, co. Westmeath, near the Athenæum.

WILSON, Hon. William, American statesman, was born at Falmouth, Co., Virginia, May 3, 1843, and was educated at Charlestown Academy, and at the Columbian College, District of Columbia (where he graduated in 1861), and at the University of Virginia. He served in the Confederate Army during the war, and for several years afterwards was Professor in Columbian College. He subsequently resigned, and practiced law at Charlestown. In 1882 he became President of the West Virginia University, but relinquished this position upon his election to Congress in 1883, where he served until 1895. He was Postmaster-General in President Cleveland's Cabinet from 1893 to 1897, when he was elected to the Washington and Lee University. Wilson was Chairman of the Revenue Commission, which framed the Revenue Act of 1894, which became law in August 1894. The measure hence became known as the "Wilson Tariff." The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him by Columbia University in 1883, and by Hampton College in 1886.

at one time M.P. for the Spen Valley, and editor of the Huddersfield Examiner, and of Catherine, eldest daughter of James Booth Woodhead, of the Ridings, Holmfirth. He was educated at Huddersfield College, and at Edinburgh University, where he was Thesis Gold Medallist in 1881, and in London and Vienna (M.D. Edin., 1881; M.B. and C.M., 1878; M., 1880, F.R.C.P. Edin., 1882). In 1878 he was President of the Royal Medical Society of Edinburgh, and is President of the British Medical Temperance Association, Fellow of the Roy. Med. Chir. Soc., and fellow or member of numerous other medical and scientific societies. In 1879 he began to teach Anatomy and then Pathology, and to carry out original investigations on these subjects in the principal medical institutions of Edinburgh, and in 1890 was appointed Director of the Laboratories of the Conjoint Board of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons in London. His work on the Embankment has been of the greatest scientific and national usefulness and importance, the laboratories there established in great measure taking the place of that Pasteur Institute for which English medical science still waits. In February 1899 Professor Sims Woodhead was appointed Professor of Pathology at Cambridge University in succession to his former colleague in London, the late Professor Kanthack, and received the thanks and congratulations of the two Colleges with which he had been so long honourably associated. From 1892 to 1895 he was Assistant-Commissioner to the Royal Commission on Tuberculosis. His works on Bacteriology and Pathology are numerous, and include "Practical Pathology" (col. illustrations), 1883, edit. 3, 1892; "Bacteria and their Products," 1891; and, with Arthur W. Hare, "Pathological Mycology: an Inquiry into the Etiology of Infective Diseases," part 1, 1885; besides a report to the Royal Commissioners on Tuberculosis, 1895, and numerous contributions to the scientific journals and to systems of medicine and surgery. Professor Sims Woodhead is editor of the Journal of Pathology and Bacteriology. He married, in 1881, a daughter of James Yates, Esq., of Edinburgh. Address: Cambridge.

WOODS, Sir Albert William, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., F.S.A., was born April 16, 1816, and is a son of Sir William Woods, who filled the office of Garter King-of-Arms from 1838 until his death in 1842. He entered the College of Arms as Portcullis Pursuivant in 1838 (and has been, therefore, a member of the Corporation for upwards of sixty years), was promoted to the office of Lancaster Herald in 1841, and became Registrar of the College in April 1886. He was advanced to the office of Garter Principal King of Arms, Oct. 25, 1869, in succession to his father's successor, Sir Charles George Young, and received the honour of knighthood on the 11th of the following month. He was attached to the missions for investing the King of Denmark, the King of the Belgians, and the Emperor of Austria with the Order of the Garter, and, as Garter, was joint plenipotentiary for investing the King of Italy, the King of Spain, and the King of Saxony. Sir A. W. Woods holds the office of Registrar and Secretary to the Order of the Bath, Registrar to the Order of the Star of India, King of Arms to that of St. Michael and St. George, and Registrar to that of the Indian Empire. He married, in 1848, Caroline, daughter of Robert Cole, of Rotherfield. Addresses: College of Arms, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.; and 69 St. George's Road, Warwick Square, S.W.

WOODS, Henry, R.A., born April 23, 1847, at Warrington, in Lancashire, is eldest son of the late Mr. William Woods, of that town, was educated at the local grammar school, entered the Warrington School of Art as a pupil at nine years of age, and remained there until he went to London, in the winter of 1864, having obtained a "National Scholarship" in the Art Training Schools at South Kensington. Mr. Woods held that scholarship for three years, working in the Antique and Life Schools, and at the study of stained glass. When he left South Kensington, the latter study was not proceeded with, but he began to illustrate for various periodicals, painting during the greater part of his time. When the Graphic started, Mr. Woods was one of the first members of its staff. His first picture exhibited at the Royal Academy was a little landscape at the first exhibition held at Burlington House. Since then he has been a regular exhibitor. His first pictures of any importance were Thames subjects—"Going Home," "Haymakers," &c. In 1876 Mr. Woods first went to Venice, and joined the group of artists who have made modern Venetian subjects so popular; his earliest pictures of everyday Venetian life were: "A Venetian Ferry" (purchased for the Cape Town Gallery), "Street Trading in Venice," "A Gondolier's Courtship," "The Ducal Courtyard," and "Preparing for the Festa." He was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1882. Since then Mr. Woods has painted: "Bargaining for an Old Master," "Preparations for First Communion," "Il Mio Traghetto," "Cupid's Spell," "Choosing a Summer-Gown," "The Water-Wheels of Savassa,"

&c. In the Royal Academy Woods exhibited "On the Giudecca," "In the St. Mark's San Rocco," and "La Piazzetta," and his subsequent exhibitions at the Academy have been chiefly on Venetian themes. Among his exhibits at the Royal Academy are: "Preparing for a Ferry, Venice 1874," "The Piazzetta, Venice 1875," "Il Campo San Paolo, Venice" (diploma), "A Venetian Christening Party," "At the Giudecca, Venice," "Valais Village," "Leisure Moments," three landscapes, 1897, and "A Man's Courtship," 1898. WOODS, Samuel, M.P., is Thomas Woods, a working coal-miner, Helens, Lancashire, and was born at seven years of age he began to work in a coal-mine, and as he grew up he took a lead in organising the miners so that they might, through combination, be able to defend their own interests and improve the conditions of their environment. In 1878 he was able to represent the Lancashire Miners' Federation, and he was elected the first Pre position he still holds, and in 1884 he became a Vice-President of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain. From 1884 to 1887 he served on the Board of Ashton, and in November 1887 he was elected as a District Councilor for the township where he lives. Woods was returned to Parliament in 1892 as a Liberal and Labour member for the South Division of Lancashire, and for several years he sat in the House of Commons, actively advocating the interests of the working classes, and consistently supporting the Government. During this time he endeavored to ventilate the grievances of the men employed on Government work, the Post-Office employees; he was appointed a member of the small committee which was sent to inquire into the salaries and wages of the men employed at the Woolwich Arsenal. It was Mr. Woods who had charge of the Miners' Eight Hours Bill, which, however, was lost in committee stage. In 1894 Mr. Woods was elected Secretary of the Trades Union Congress, a post which he still holds. At the general election he lost his seat in 1895, but, at a bye-election in February 1896, he was returned once more to the House of Commons as Labour and Liberal member for the Walthamstow Division of London.

He gained a first-class miner's certificate, by public examination in 1886, and he has travelled in America and on the Continent, in connection with the International Miners' Congresses. Mr. Woods is a Baptist and abstainer. Addresses: Rose Villa, near Wigan, Lancs.; and 19 Weymouth Street, Strand, W.C.

WOODVILLE, Richard Caton, is the son of an artist who was born in London, but who died in London. He was born in London on Jan. 7, 1856, and was educated at Düsseldorf, Germany. He became an artist, and made a speciality of battle pictures, exhibiting his pictures at the Royal Academy in 1879, and since then annually. He has painted large pictures for the Queen, which are in Windsor Castle, viz.: "The Siege of Whippingham Church," "The Death of General Howard," and "The Battle of Tel-el-Kebir." He was present at the Turkish war of 1878, and in the Egyptian war of 1882, and has received the rank of Commander of the Order of the Medjidieh, and of Daniello, Montenegro.

He has also illustrated numerous stories, appearing in magazines, and has himself written articles on sport and travel. Mr. Caton was married, in 1883, to Mrs. Edith Dunnington, née Curtis. Address: 10 Grosvenor Gate, W.

WOODWARD, Henry, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., F.R.M.S., Pres. Pal. Soc., Keeper of the Department of Geology, British Museum (Natural History), is the sixth son of the late Samuel Woodward, of Norwich, author of "The Geology of Norfolk," 1833; a "Synoptical Table of British Organic Remains," 1830, &c. His eldest brother, Mr. B. B. Woodward, B.A. Lond., F.S.A., was for some years Librarian to her Majesty at Windsor Castle. His second brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, F.G.S., for seventeen years in the Department of Geology, British Museum, was a geologist and naturalist of eminence, and author of a "Manual of the Mollusca," 1851-56, which has reached a sale of upwards of 12,000 copies. The subject of the present notice was born at Norwich, Nov. 24, 1832. His father died when he was only five years of age. Henry Woodward was educated at the Norwich Grammar School, and at the Grammar School, Botesdale, Suffolk. Thence, in 1846, he went to reside with his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, at that time Professor of Natural History at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, where he entered as an out-door student at the College, and worked diligently for three years. There he imbibed that knowledge of geology and love of natural history which, inherited from his father, needed only opportunity and encouragement to develop. In January 1858 Professor Owen, the Superintendent of the Natural History Departments in the British Museum, wrote offering him a junior assistant's post in the Geological Department, under Mr. G. R. Waterhouse, where his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, was already a senior assistant. His ready acceptance of this small post evinced his anxiety to take up geology as a profession, and he entered on his new duties with alacrity. In 1859 he was made a second-class assistant, in 1865 a first-class, and in 1867 he entered the first-class upper section, a proof that his services met with favourable official recognition. In the spring of 1860 he accepted an invitation to join Mr. Robert MacAndrew, F.R.S., on a dredging expedition to the south coast of Spain and the Mediterranean; and at Malaga and Gibraltar he made excellent zoological and geological collections. In 1863 he again joined MacAndrew in a dredging expedition along the north coast of the Spanish peninsula from Bilbao to Coruna. Excursions were also made into the interior to Vittoria, Burgos, &c. In 1864 Mr. Woodward commenced, and still continues, to edit the Geological Magazine, a monthly journal of geology, now in its thirty-fifth year. Dr. Woodward's contributions to scientific literature number nearly 300; he has also published a monograph on the "Fossil Merostomata," and one on "Carboniferous Trilobites," in the volumes of the Palaeontographical Society; a Catalogue of British Fossil Crustacea, published by the Trustees of the British Museum; articles on "Mollusca" and "Crustacea," in "Cassell's Natural History"; and on "Crustacea," in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." In 1873-74 Mr. Woodward was elected President of the Geologists' Association. In February 1893 he assisted in founding the Malacological Society of London, and was its first President, from 1893 to 1895, and now is Vice-President; and was from 1894 to 1896 President of the Geological Society, and since June 1896 President of the Palaeontographical Society of London. In 1878 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1878 the University of St. Andrews conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. On June 23, 1880, on the retirement of Mr. George R. Waterhouse, the Principal Trustees of the British Museum appointed Dr. Henry Woodward Keeper of the Department of Geology, in which he had served as an assistant for twenty-two years, a promotion which was received with satisfaction among scientific men generally. In 1857 Mr. Woodward married Ellen Sophia, only child of Fountain Page, Esq., of Norwich, by whom he has two sons and five daughters. Dr. Woodward's eldest son, H. P. Woodward, J.P., Assoc. Memb. Inst. C.E., F.G.S., is now Honorary Gov. Geologist for Western Australia; and the younger, M. F. Woodward, is Demonstrator in Biology in the Royal College of Science, London. Dr. Woodward's daughters are very successful artists and book-illustrators; and one is a member of the British College of Physical Education. Address: 129 Beaufort Street, Chelsea, S.W.

WOODWARD, Horace Bolingbroke, F.R.S., F.G.S., born at Barnsbury, London, Aug. 20, 1848, is the second son of the late Dr. S. P. Woodward, F.G.S., of the British Museum, and author of a "Manual of the Mollusca." He was educated at private schools, and was appointed an assistant in the Library and Museum of the Geological Society, then at Somerset House, in 1863. He joined the staff of the Geological Survey of Great Britain in 1867 as Assistant Geologist, was promoted to be Geologist in 1873, and District Surveyor in 1896. He is author of "The Geology of England and Wales," 1876 (2nd edit., 1887); also of several memoirs of the Geological Survey, on the "Geology of East Somerset, &c.," "Norwich," "Fakenham," "The Jurassic Rocks of Britain," and "Soils and Sub-soils from a Sanitary Point of View," 1876-97. He was a member of the Norwich Geological Society, the Norfolk Naturalists' Club, and of the Geologists' Club. In 1894, was elected a Fellow of the Geological Society in 1896, and received the Murchison Medal by the Geological Society in 1896. He resides at 129 Beaufort Street, Chelsea, S.W.

WOOLLEY, Celia, a writer, was born at Tolleshott, Dorset. When she was quite young she moved to Coldwater, Middlesex, where she spent a few months at the Plainesville Seminary (Plainesville, N.Y.), where she was educated, graduating from the Seminary in 1866. She began with occasional contributions to periodicals. For eight years she was a Chicago correspondent of the Register (a Boston Unitarian paper). In 1884 Lippincott's published her story, and a few others in the same magazine. Her first novel, issued in 1887, and was a great favour. It was called "Love and Change," and changed in later editions to "Armstrong." She has two others, "A Girl and a Boy," and "Roger Hunt." She was married to D. J. Woolley in 1876. In 1876 she went to Chicago, where she was a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union for two years. She was before which she first began to write. For a period of nearly ten years she was assistant editor of a radical Unitarian paper. Mrs. Woolley's mind is chiefly engaged in religious questions, and in 1887 she accepted a call to the Unitarian Church, Gillingham, where she is engaged.

WORCESTER, PEROWNE, THE RIGHT HON. STEWART.

WORDSWORTH, John, was educated at Cambridge, where he was a Scholar in 1867, and a Fellow in 1871. In the latter year he received his degree, and was ordained in 1877. He was a Fellow of the University College, Cambridge, from 1877 to 1879. He also acted as Rector of Galston, Rutland, in 1877. He is now Rector of Galston, Rutland.

preferred, after a period of twelve to the Rectory of Tyneham, near am. He was installed a Prebendary of Lincoln Cathedral in 1886, and he is at present Rector of St. Peter's, Marlborough. He is the author of "University Society in the 18th Century," 1874; and "Scholæ in the 19th Century," 1877; and he has been engaged in editing "Breviarium ad usum A.D. 1531," 3 vols., 1879-86; "Liturgicale Ecclesiæ S. Andreae," 1885; "Lincoln Cathedral Statutes," vol. i., "Coronation of King Charles I., 1892, &c.

WORDSWORTH, Elizabeth, daughter of Christopher Wordsworth, late Bishop of Lincoln, eldest sister of the Bishop of Salisbury, and great-niece of the poet, was born at Harrow June 22, 1842, and was educated mainly at home. She was the foundation of Lady Margaret Hall at Oxford, in 1879, Miss Wordsworth was appointed its first Principal, a position which she still holds. In 1886, the need being felt of supplying a college for women students, unable to bear the expense of Lady Margaret Hall, might have equal educational advantages, she founded St. Hugh's Hall, which now contains about twenty-five students within its walls. Miss Wordsworth has written many poems and tales of considerable interest, and very popular papers for Church magazines of women and girls, e.g. "Rights for the Chimney Corner," a remarkable short volume on William Wordsworth, and three valuable series of lectures, entitled "Illustrations of the Decalogue," and "The Prayer," and a Life of Bishop C. Wordsworth. Address: Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford.

WORDSWORTH, The Right Rev. D.D., LL.D., Bishop of Salisbury, son of the late Right Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, and nephew of the late Bishop of Exeter, and therefore great-nephew of the poet, was born at Harrow, Sept. 21, 1842, and educated at Ipswich, Winchester, and at New College, Oxford, where he was graduated in 1865. In 1866 he became Tutor at Wellington College, which brought him into close relation with the Archbishop Benson, and in 1867 he was elected Fellow, and in 1868 Tutor of New College, Oxford. He was appointed Prebendary of Lincoln in 1870; Preacher at Oxford, 1876; Bampton Lecturer, 1881; Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, with

Canonry of Rochester annexed, 1883. On the death of Dr. Moberly in 1885 he was appointed Bishop of Salisbury. The Bishop has interested himself in a variety of subjects of a literary and religious character, of which the following are the principal. His chief publications are noticed under each head. 1. Latin Classical Literature—"Lectures Introductory to a History of Latin Literature," 1870; "Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin," 1874. 2. The Latin New Testament—He has long been engaged upon a critical edition of St. Jerome's Vulgate for the Oxford Press, and has published the first volume, containing the four gospels, in conjunction with the Rev. H. J. White, now Fellow and Chaplain of Merton College, Oxford. Subsidiary to this are a series of "Old Latin Biblical Texts," Oxford, 1883, &c., and "The Corbey St. James," in the first volume of the "Studia Biblica," Oxford, 1885. 3. The Education Question—He published several pamphlets at Oxford on the subject of religious education in the Universities, and has since interested himself largely in the cause of voluntary schools, particularly during a school crisis at Salisbury in 1888-89. His Bill for Freedom of Religious Instruction in Board Schools, passed the House of Lords in 1893. His "Prayers for all in College" reached a second edition in 1890. He founded a useful higher-grade Elementary and Science School at Salisbury, and is Visitor of the New City Grammar School. 4. The Old Catholic Movement—He attended his father at the second Old Catholic Congress held at Cologne in 1872, and has since continued a warm friend of the work. He was present at the Congresses of Cologne in 1890, and Lucerne in 1892, and has personally visited the chief centres as well as the leaders of the different Churches in Holland, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. After the Lambeth Conference of 1888 he was appointed to translate the Encyclical Letter into Greek and Latin, and was asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury to act as Episcopal adviser to Count Compello and the Italian Reformers. In this capacity he has assisted in the revision of the Italian Liturgy (Italian, Bennet Bros., Salisbury; English, Gilbert and Rivington, for Anglo-Continental Society, 1893). 5. The Colonial Churches—In 1894-95 he made a journey of nearly six months' duration round the world through Colombo, Adelaide (S. Australia), Melbourne, Tasmania, New Zealand (where he spent two months), Sydney, Fiji, Hawaii, Vancouver, and back by the Canadian Pacific Railway and New York. It was probably in consequence of this that he was elected Chairman of the Committee of the Lambeth Conference of 1897 on

"The Organisation of the Anglican Communion." The Bishop is also an earnest supporter of foreign missions. 6. The Eastern Churches—In January and February 1898 the Bishop visited the Patriarch of Alexandria, the Archbishop of Cyprus, the Bishops of the Patriarchate of Antioch at Damascus (during vacancy of the Patriarchal throne), and the Patriarchs of Jerusalem and Constantinople, bearing letters from the Archbishop of Canterbury, and explaining to them the resolutions of the Lambeth Conference of 1898 on the Unity of Christendom. He has also visited the Coptic Patriarch at Cairo and the Armenian Patriarch at Jerusalem. He is Chairman of the "Jerusalem and the East Mission Fund" in England, and was expected to take another journey to Jerusalem in September 1898 in order to consecrate St. George's Collegiate Church at Jerusalem, under commission from the Archbishop of Canterbury. 7. Liturgical Questions—The Bishop was one of the five assessors of the Archbishop in the well-known case of Read v. the Bishop of Lincoln. His Charge of 1891 on "The Holy Communion" reached a second edition in 1892, and contains in its preface some observations on the judgment in that case. Several of the forms for occasional services put out in the Diocese of Salisbury are worthy of attention, particularly that for "Consecration of Churches," &c., and for "Commemoration of Founders, Benefactors, and Worthies of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury." His article on the "Te Deum," in Julian's "Dictionary of Hymnology," contains a large amount of material. He is likewise President of the "Henry Bradshaw Society," and of the "Mediæval Music Society." 8. Church History and Doctrine—His chief work is one on the relation of Christianity to other religions, entitled "The One Religion: or Truth, Holiness, and Peace desired by the Nations, and revealed by Jesus Christ," being the Bampton Lecture for 1881, which reached a second edition in 1887. His articles on "Constantine the Great and his Sons," and the Emperor Julian in Smith and Chetham's "Dictionary of Christian Biography" may also be mentioned. 9. Sermons—He published a small volume of "University Sermons on Gospel Subjects" in 1878, and many single sermons, amongst which two may be mentioned, "On Christian Discipline of the Will, with a note on Spiritism," and "I am the Door," at a Theological College festival, both in 1893. Addresses: The Palace, Salisbury; Lollards' Tower, Lambeth, S.E.; and Athenæum.

WORSLEY-TAYLOR son, Q.C., D.L., J.P., is the late James Worsley, of the Linton, Lancashire, and was born in 1847. He was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he obtained B.A. in 1870. He was called to the Middle Temple, practised for a few years in the Circuit and at Preston Sessions, and since then confined his work to the Parliamentary Bar; became Recorder of Preston in 1893, resigning in 1898. At the death of his father-in-law, James Taylor, he assumed the name of Worsley-Taylor in 1881. He married, in 1881, Miss Sayer, only daughter of Sir John Sayer, Bart. Address: Palace Chambers, Westminster Street, Westminster.

WORTHINGTON, ALFRED M.A., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., is the son of the late John Worthington, of Crumpton, Lancashire, and was born on 18th March 1851. He was educated at Rugby School, and afterwards at Balliol College, Oxford, and afterwards at the University of Cambridge, where he worked under Professor Holtz. He was appointed Lecturer in the Salt Schools, Shipley, in 1877, became an Assistant Master at Clifton College in 1881, and was appointed as Head Master and Professor of Mathematics in H.M. Dockyard School, Devonport, in 1887. In the following year he was transferred to the Engineering College, Devonport, where he holds the same appointment. He has published several papers on physical subjects, and has written some elementary text-books, "Physical Laboratory Practises of Rotation"; "The Drop." He was married, in 1881, to Miss Solly, daughter of Thomas Solly, Esq., of the English Literature in the University of Berlin. Address: Royal Naval Engineering College, Devonport.

WORTHY, Charles. is the son of the late Rev. Charles Worthy, of the Queen's College, Oxford, who was for 25 years Vicar of Ashburton, Devon, and who died in 1879, and of his wife, first cousin of the late Rev. John Richardson, LL.D., the Lecturer in "Men of the Time," sixth volume. He was born at Snayle Tower, Devon, on 28th March 1840; educated at Exeter School, and subsequently at the University of Cambridge and private tutors. He was called to the Bar in 1862, and received a commission in the 82nd Regiment of Foot in 1858, and proceeded to India in the following year. His health failing, he resigned his commission. Worthy was invalided from India in 1864, receiving a gratuity and turned his attention to the Antiquities of Devonshire, his county. Since 1871 he has been a contributor of valuable articles on general antiquarian, historical, and logical matters, to magazines and papers, and has obtained a reputation for special knowledge of English history. From 1876 to 1886 he was member of the Council of the Devonshire Association, and the author of many papers in its Transactions. Prior to 1879 for some time Honorary Local Secretary at Ashburton, under the Science and Art Department. He received the thanks of the Lords of the Committee of the Council, "for valuable assistance rendered," in 1884. He has also thrice received the thanks of the Chapter of the Cathedral of Exeter, 1882-89; those of the Council of the British Museum in the year 1889; and the thanks of the Society of Antiquaries under their great seal, 1873-79. In 1875 he published "Ashburton and its Neighbourhood," "The Antiquities and History of Fourteen Parishes on the Borders of Dartmoor," fcap. 4to; "Manor of Winkleigh, the Ancient Honour of Gloucester," 8vo, 1879; "Local Guide to Ashburton and its Neighbourhood," 1879; "Memoir of Walter de Exeter (1308)," printed by Bideford and the House of Exeter," (reprinted from Transactions of Devonshire Association), 1876 and 1884. He was coadjutor to the late Stephen Somerset Herald, from 1879-1882. His volume of "Devonshire Parishes, Antiquities, Heraldry, and Family History of Twenty-eight Parishes in the Deanery of Totnes," appeared in 1889. In the following year he published "Some of English armoury under the reign of Henry III" (1 vol. cr. 8vo, pp. 1-100; vol. ii. of "Devonshire Parishes" published in 1889 (2 vols. rl. 8vo, pp. 766). He also revised the 1887 edition of White's "Hand-book for Devonshire," and printed a small work on "The Lord Iddlesleigh, with a Genealogical History of the Northcote Family," 1887, a pamphlet, which ran to a second edition within three days. In 1887 he revised portions of White's "Devonshire," for which he had previously written, in 1879, "An Analysis of the Domesday," and the "History of the Cathedral of Exeter." In 1892, he revised and edited Messrs. A. & C. Black's "Devonshire Guide Book." In 1892 he published the "History of the City of Exeter," with "A Digression on the Noble Houses of Redvers and of the Earls of Devon" (cr. 8vo, pp. 1-100), and, during the same year, he revised and edited the 12th edition of

Black's "Guide to Kent." His "Folk Tales of the West" appeared periodically during 1894, and these, with his very numerous similar articles, on subjects affecting the general history of England, to which he is still constantly adding, are alone sufficient for several interesting and important volumes in the future. His "Devonshire Wills," a rl. 8vo vol. of 531 pages, appeared in 1896, and includes his "Gentle Houses of the West," which gives, as the outcome of independent research, the origin and history of some of the most ancient and illustrious English families. Permanent address: Heavitree, Exeter.

WRENFORDSLEY, The Hon. Sir Henry Thomas, Knight, was educated in France, and having been called to the English Bar, practised for some years on the old Norfolk Circuit. He contested the city of Peterborough, in the Conservative interest, in 1868; and again in 1874, but without success. In 1876, he was appointed acting Deputy County Court Judge for the Metropolitan districts of Marylebone, Brompton, and Brentford. In 1877, he became Puisne Judge in the Colony of Mauritius; and in June 1878 he left the Bench, and became Procureur-General. Before leaving the Colony, he received a vote of thanks from the Legislative Council in respect of his public services in connection with the passing of the Labour Law, and reforms introduced into the judicial administration of the Colony. In 1880, he was appointed to the Chief Justiceship of Western Australia, and received the Dormant Commission from the Crown to administer, in case of need, the Government of that Colony. He was appointed Delegate to represent the Colony at the Intercolonial Conference held at Sydney in 1881; and subsequently he administered the Government from February to June 1883. During that period, he organised and started the first Expedition to the Kimberley, or northern district, and named the first town "Derby," by permission of the Secretary of State. A further expedition was despatched for the purpose of extending the telegraph system about 900 miles further north. He received the honour of knighthood and several public addresses before leaving the Colony. In 1883, Sir Henry proceeded in H.M.S. Diamond to Fiji, as Chief Justice of that Colony, and also held the appointment of Judicial Commissioner for the Western Pacific. In 1884, he left Fiji on leave, in consequence of bad health. Before leaving the Colony, he was entertained by the leading merchants and others at the largest banquet ever given in that part of the Pacific. Subsequently, and by permission of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, he became acting Puisne Judge in the Colony of Tasmania. In consequence of the action of the Colonial Office in having filled up his appointment in Fiji, Sir Henry was called to the Bar of Victoria and became a Queen's Counsel. In 1888, he was invited by the Government of Victoria to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court in the absence of one of the Judges, for which duty he received the thanks of the Colonial Government. In 1890, he was appointed by the Secretary of State, acting Chief Justice of Western Australia, and he held that appointment at the time when that Colony received a new Act of Constitution, and became for the first time a responsible Government Colony. In 1891, he was appointed Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands. Sir Henry has thus served the Crown as a Judge of the Supreme Court in six of her Majesty's Colonies; viz., Mauritius, Western Australia, Fiji, Tasmania, Victoria, and Leeward Islands, besides having held the appointments of Procureur-General in Mauritius, and Deputy Governor in Western Australia. Address: St. John's, Antigua.

WRIGHT, Charles Romley Alder, D.Sc. Lond., B.Sc. Vict., F.R.S., was born at Southend, Essex, on Sept. 7, 1844, being the son of the late Romley Wright, C.E., and Elizabeth Alder, of Hull. As a boy, Dr. Alder Wright was greatly attracted by chemical and physical science, attaining some degree of proficiency by self-tuition; so that when subsequently he attended classes at Owens College, Manchester, 1861-65, he was enabled to take and maintain throughout his entire curriculum the highest place in the examination lists. He graduated as B.Sc., Lond., in 1865, and as D.Sc., Lond., in 1870. After taking the former degree he became Assistant to Prof. (now Sir Henry) Roscoe, F.R.S., whom he assisted in the prosecution of the earlier portion of his classical researches on Vanadium. During 1866-67, Dr. Alder Wright filled the position of Chemist in the works of the Runcorn Soap and Alkali Co., Weston, Cheshire, and was engaged in technical work of various descriptions. In 1867 he came to London as Assistant, first to the late Dr. A. Bernay, of St. Thomas' Hospital, and subsequently to the late Dr. A. Matthiesen of St. Mary's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, with whom several scientific memoirs were published conjointly. During 1869-71, he was engaged in co-operating with Mr. (now Sir) Lowthian Bell, F.R.S., in the prosecution of his elaborate investigations on the Chemistry of Iron Smelting. In 1871 he was appointed Lecturer on Chemistry, Physics and Practical Chemistry in the medical school of St. Mary's Hospital, London, which appointment he held since which he has been in constant practice as Consulting Teacher of Chemistry, besides devoting much time to chemical research. In 1871 he became a Fellow of the Royal Society, and held the posts of Examiner in Chemistry to the University of Durham, and Lecturer in the Royal College of Physicians on the subjects of "Iron and Steel" and "Manufacture" to the City of London Institute. Since 1871, in 1866, of his first researches in the laboratories of Owens College, Manchester, Wright has contributed to the proceedings of scientific societies upwards of 100 reports and memoirs on various investigations in Chemistry, besides numerous minor reports and many papers on theoretical and practical subjects. These investigations have been done in almost every branch of Chemical Science, especially Organic, Analytical, and Organometallic Chemistry, and various branches of Technical and Applied Chemistry. His technical researches include investigations connected with the metallurgy of aluminium, various alloys, the nature of alkali and of soap, the manufacture of waterproof paper and of "Willesden" products, new materials, and disinfectants. His connection with these subjects has been taken out for publication, and of which are in successful operation. Various communications have appeared in the Royal Institution, the Society of Chemical Industry, and the form of a series of lectures. The chief books and monographs published by Dr. Alder Wright are the following: "Metals and their Industrial Applications" (Lecture Notes, the Royal Institution), 1871; articles in "Muspratt's Dictionary of Chemistry," 1872; "Coal-Tar Distillation and the products thence derived, Anthracene, Naphthalene," 1874; Monograph on "Iron and Steel," 1874; other articles, "Ency. Brit.," 1875; Cantor Lectures, Society of Chemical Industry, "Manufacture of Toilet Soap," 1892; "Threshold of Science," 1892; on "Soap," "Sulphur," and "Acid," Thorpe's "Dictionary of Chemistry," 1893; "Fixed Alkalies, Butters, and Waxes, and the manufacture therefrom of Candles, Soap, and other products," 1894. The list of Mr. Wright's contributions to scientific literature during the years 1874 and 1882 totals 100 and a half columns of the "Catalogue of Scientific Publications," 1892. Address: Chemical Laboratory, St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, W.

WRIGHT, Charles Theodore Hag- born in Yorkshire, Nov. 17, 1863, is the eldest son of the Rev. C. H. H. Wright, and grandson of Nils Wilhelm Hag, Governor of the Royal Mint, Berlin, and Knight of the North Star. He was educated privately in France, Italy, and Russia, and also at the Academical Institution, Belfast, and received the degrees of B.A. (first class) and M.A. at Trinity College, Dublin. After travelling in the East of Europe for a number of years he was appointed in 1890 Assistant Librarian in the National Library of Ireland. In 1893 Mr. Wright was appointed Secretary and Librarian to the Bodleian Library. During Mr. Wright's tenure of office the Library has been completely reorganised at a cost of about £15,000, five thousand pounds of which was subscribed by the members of the Bodleian, which is now the leading institution of its kind, and indeed without parallel in the United Kingdom. Mr. Wright has written articles on Russian literature, &c., in the National Review, Review, &c. Address: Marlborough House, 83 Victoria Street, S.W.

WRIGHT, The Hon. Sir Robert Peel, M.A., B.C.L., was born in 1839, the eldest son of the Rev. Henry Wright, of Litton, Somersetshire. He was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he had a distinguished career. He took first class in Classical Moderations in 1857 and in Literæ Humaniores in 1860. In 1859-62 he gained three University prizes—the Latin Verse prize, the English Essay, and the Arnold Essay; he was elected to a Fellowship at Oriel, of which he is now an honorary Fellow, and he received the Craven Scholarship in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June 1865, and joined the Eastern Circuit. He has held the office of common law junior counsel to the Attorney General for several years. He succeeded Lord Baron Huddleston as one of the Justices of the High Court in December 1890. He married, in 1891, a daughter of the late Rev. R. S. Chermiside. Address: 14 St. James's Place, S.W., &c.; Athenæum.

WURTEMBERG, King of, Charles Henry Frederick William II., born at Stuttgart on Feb. 25, 1848, the son of Prince Frederick. He succeeded to the throne on Oct. 6, 1891. He was colonel of several regiments in Prussia, Russia, and Germany, and was appointed Honorary Colonel of an Austrian Hussar Regiment. He married (1), the Princess of Waldeck and Piermont, Feb. 15, 1873, and (2), the Princess Charlotte of Schaumburg-Lippe, April 8, 1886, who was born Oct. 10, 1864. By his first marriage he had one daughter, the Princess Pauline Olga Helen Emma, born Dec. 19, 1877. His heir, the Duke of Wurtemberg, died in November 1896.

WYLLIE, William Lionel, A.R.A., is the eldest son of the late William Morrison Wyllie, and was born in London in July 1851. He was educated at Heatherley's, and entered the Royal Academy Schools in 1866, gaining the Turner medal three years later. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1889, and amongst his pictures, which have been recently exhibited, there may be mentioned: "London's Water Gate," "The Opening of the Tower Bridge" (a notable picture), "The Union Liner SS. Norman leaving Southampton," "Bound for the Rio Grande," "A Southerly Gale, Brighton," 1895; "London Bridge," "Rearing the Lion's Whelps," "A Silent Highway," "Crippled, but Unconquered," 1896; "The Winding Medway," "Barry Docks," "The Liner's Escort," 1897; "Commerce and Sea Power," "Union Liner Briton off Calshot," "The Harbour Bar," "Entrance to Barry Dock," and "R.M.S. Valhalla," 1898; "Peace and Plenty" and "The Battle of the Nile," 1899. Mr. Wyllie spends a good deal of time in yachting, and is the Commodore of the Medway Yacht Club. He was married, in 1879, to Marian Amy, daughter of Captain Carew of the Indian Marine. Address: Hoo Lodge, Hoo Street, Werburgh, near Rochester, Kent.

WYNDHAM, Charles, was born in 1841, and was educated for the medical profession. He went to America in 1862, and made his first appearance as an actor at Washington with John Wilkes Booth (the assassin of President Lincoln), playing Osric to his Hamlet, and subsequently, Glavis to his Claude Melnotte. On the termination of his engagement he returned to the army, in which he had already served as a surgeon, and was concerned in some engagements that took place in the Civil War. He was attached to the 19th Army Corps, having at one time the medical charge of a brigade, and at another charge of a regiment. On returning to England he went to Liverpool, to the Old Amphitheatre, where his success was such that it led to a highly remunerative engagement of several months' duration. In May 1868 he made his first London appearance as Sir Arthur Lascelles in "All that Glitters is not Gold." He returned to America in 1869, and appeared with distinction at Wallack's Theatre as Charles Surface in "The School for

Scandal." Coming home again, he re-appeared at the St. James's Theatre in 1872, then under Mr. Stephen Fiske's management, as Rabagas. A provincial tour followed this engagement, and in 1873 he played "the lead" at the Royalty, appearing there notably in the character which he revived in 1886 in "Wild Oats." A version of Mr. Bronson Howard's comedy "Saratoga," called "Brighton," was produced at the Court Theatre in 1874, with Mr. Wyndham in the principal character. In 1875 he went to Berlin and produced a version of "Brighton" in German. From 1876 the Criterion Theatre, under Mr. Wyndham's management, was distinguished by pieces of lively character, until in 1886 he made trial of old comedy. In the year 1887 another visit to Germany was paid, embracing the cities of Berlin, Frankfort, and Liegnitz, during which "David Garrick," in German, under the title of "Auf Ehrenwort," was played, and proved such a success that an invitation from the Emperor of Russia extended the tour to St. Petersburg and Moscow. On the occasion of his performance in the Russian capital, Mr. Wyndham was presented by the Czar with a magnificent sapphire and ruby ring in recognition of the pleasure which his acting had afforded his Majesty. Two years later another tour to America followed, when Boston, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, and Philadelphia were visited, the repertoire including such plays as "David Garrick," "The Candidate," "Wild Oats," "Still Waters Run Deep," and an eccentric comedy, written specially for Mr. Wyndham by F. C. Burnand, editor of London Punch, and entitled "The Headless Man," when fresh laurels were gathered, resulting in a cordial invitation on the part of the American public to revisit the United States at no very distant date. One of the latter characterisations with which Mr. Wyndham has identified himself is Young Marlow in "She Stoops to Conquer." He has also achieved great success in "Rosemary," where he figures as a man in early middle age in 1837, and as a very old man in 1887. In May 1896 two gala performances were given, in which nearly every English actor and actress of note took part, in order to celebrate the attainment of his twentieth year of management at the Criterion. At the close of the two performances the popular actor, who had appeared as Charles Surface, came forward to thank his enthusiastic audience, and to announce that the proceeds of the two performances, amounting to £2300, would be handed over to the Actors' Benevolent Fund. In July 1899, at a crowded performance, at which the Prince of Wales and distinguished persons were present, Mr. Wyndham bade good-bye to his old theatre, and he will continue to manage in the new theatre shortly after him. Address: 39 Finch

WYNDHAM, George, son of the Hon. Percy Wyndham, born in London on Aug. 2, 1852, educated at Eton and the Royal College, Sandhurst, and for a time he served in the 1st Battalion of the Buffs, taking part in the Campaign of 1885. He was Secretary to Mr. Balfour, and held the offices of Chief Secretary for Ireland, 1887-91, and First Secretary to the Treasury, 1891-92. Mr. Wyndham entered Parliament in 1889, when he was elected as Conservative member for the City of London, and has since represented that constituency. In October 1898 he was appointed Parliamentary Under-Secretary for War. Since 1894 he has been in the Cheshire Yeomanry, and a Justice of the Peace for the County of London. In 1887 Mr. Wyndham married the Countess Grosvenor, daughter of the Earl of Scarborough, and the Countess Grosvenor, eldest son of the Duke of Westminster. Address: 3

Mr. Yeames was elected a Royal Academician June 19, 1878, and is Librarian of the Royal Academy. He married a niece of Sir David Wilkie. Address: 4 Campbell Road, Hanwell, W.

YEATMAN-BIGGS, The Right Rev. Hayshe Wolcott, M.A., D.D., Bishop-Suffragan of Southwark, was born Feb. 2, 1845, at Manston House, Dorsetshire, and is the son of Harry Farr Yeatman, J.P., thus belonging to an old Dorset family. He was educated at Winchester, where he became a Prefect, was captain of the second six at football, and shot in the Wimbledon eleven for two years, and at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he was Dixie Scholar, and graduated in 1867. Although originally intended for the diplomatic service, he went in for a course of Gaylard, the old family seat in Dorset, as well as Stockton House, Wilts. Addresses: Dartmouth House, Blackheath Hill, S.E.: and Athenæum.

YEATS, W. B., Irish poet, was born on June 13, 1865, at Sandymount, Dublin, and is the son of J. B. Yeats, portrait painter and illustrator. He spent the greatest portion of his childhood at Sligo with his grandparents, but joined his father and mother in London when about nine years old, and then for some years attended the Godolphin School, Hammersmith, as a day scholar, spending his holidays usually in the west of Ireland. When he was fifteen he removed with his parents to Dublin, and there attended the Erasmus Smith School in Harcourt Street. When about nineteen he began studying art at the Royal Dublin Society, but soon gave up this for literature, contributing n to King's College Hospital, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of England. While in Dublin published in the local medical journals various papers, chiefly of a pathological nature.

Since coming to London most of his works have been physiological. But his work on the application of aseptic principles to cranial operations gave some impetus to cerebral surgery, and a report on the Pathology of Bovine Pleura-pneumonia undertaken for the Royal Agricultural Society, may have had some influence in the application of the "stamp-system," by which this disease has practically exterminated. Some of his researches were communicated to the Society, and have appeared in the Transactions and Proceedings of that body; a greater part of his contributions published in the Journal of Physiology.

He is the author of a well-known Manual of Physiology for the Use of Students of Medicine. He has held the office of Examiner in the Universities of Cambridge, and London, the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Veterinary College. He acted as Private Secretary of the Physiological Society from its foundation in 1875 until 1882. It is a strange coincidence that the two medical men of the same surname in England should both be of King's College, London; but Mr. Gerald Yeo is in no way related to Dr. Isaac Burney. In 1890 he resigned his Chair of Physiology, being made Emeritus Professor, and since that time has devoted himself to agricultural and horticultural pursuits. Address: Bowden House, Totnes, Devon.

Dr. Isaac Burney, M.D., Professor of Principles and Practice of Medicine in King's College, London, and Physician to King's College Hospital, descended from an ancient Cornish family already in Cornwall in the reign of Edward I. He was born at Stonehouse, Devonshire, educated privately, until, in 1858, he became a student in King's College, London, where he rapidly distinguished himself, and obtained three scholarships, a fellowship and other distinctions. At the end of Medicine's examination, in London University, he obtained the highest marks qualifying for the Gold Medal.

In 1866 he was appointed Reader in Medical Tutor in King's College; but he resigned in 1871, and began to practise in Mayfair, having about that time been elected one of the physicians in residence at King's College Hospital. He was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians (1876), Honorary Member of the Royal Society, and Professor of Clinical Therapeutics in King's College, London (1885), and Physician to King's College Hospital. Dr. Yeo has contributed largely to medical literature, and has furnished numerous lectures, commentaries, &c., to the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c. Dr. Yeo has devoted himself, with much success, to the examination and development of methods of treating disease, the branch of medical science known as therapeutics. His well-known work on "Climate and Health Resorts" has gone through three editions, and had for its object the investigation of the influence of climate and mineral water and baths in the cure of disease. This work was followed by a treatise on "Food in Health and Disease," since become the accepted authority on subjects connected with diet and regimen in health, as well as diseased states. Dr. Yeo's last contribution to medical literature (1893) is a "Manual of Medical Treatment, or Clinical Therapeutics," a work dealing adequately with the wide subject of the best methods of treating all forms of what are known as Medical Diseases, as distinguished from Surgical Maladies. The article on "Nutrition and Food, including the Treatment of Obesity and Leanness," in Hare's "System of Practical Therapeutics," published in America, is from the pen of Dr. Burney Yeo. In 1882 he published some lectures on Consumption, in which he drew attention, prominently, to the discovery of Professor Koch, and pointed out the probability that this disease is propagated by contagion, a view which is now generally accepted. He is the translator of Oertel's "Respiratory Therapeutics" in Ziemssen's "Handbook of General Therapeutics," and of articles in Ziemssen's "Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine." He has also contributed several articles to the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century. Dr. Yeo has been for more than ten years the Medical Adviser in London to the Life Association of Scotland. Address: 44 Hertford Street, Mayfair, W.

YERBURGH, Robert Armstrong, M.P., D.L., J.P., is the son of the Rev. Richard Yerburgh, Vicar of Sleaford, Lincolnshire, and was born on Jan. 17, 1853. He was educated at Rossall, Harrow, and University College, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1880. He acted as Private Secretary to Mr. Akers-Douglas, when Patronage Secretary, from 1885 to 1886, and was Assistant Private Secretary to Mr. W. H. Smith when First Lord of the Treasury in 1887. He was elected as Conservative member for Chester in 1886, and has represented that constituency ever since; he is also a County Councillor and a Justice of the Peace for Lancashire. Mr.

Yerburgh is President of the Agricultural Bank Association, Hon. Secretary of the Recreation Evening Schools Association, Vice-Chairman of the National Home Reading Union, and a Member of Council of the Statistical Society. He has published articles advocating National Granaries for storage of corn, in order to complete our system of home defence, and has also written pamphlets on agricultural banks. He married, in 1888, the great heiress Elma Amy, daughter of Daniel Thwaites, of Billings Scarr, Blackburn, formerly M.P. Addresses: 25 Kensington Gore, S.W.; and Woodfold Park, Blackburn.

YONGE, Charlotte Mary, only daughter of the late W. C. Yonge, Esq., of Otterbourne, Hants, a magistrate for Hampshire, was born in 1823. She is the authoress of many works of fiction, in which the plot is made to enforce, in a plain and sober manner, the doctrines of what is called the High-Church school of opinion. She has always lived at Otterbourne, and had no events to record. Her best known works are: "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Amy Herbert," "Katherine Ashton," "Heartsease," "Dynevore Terrace," "The Daisy Chain," "The Young Stepmother; or, a Chronicle of Mistakes," "Hopes and Fears; or, Scenes from the Life of a Spinster," "The Lances of Lynwood," "The Little Duke," "Clever Women of the Family," "Prince and the Page: a Story of the Last Crusade," and "Dove in the Eagle's Nest." Most of these have gone through several editions, and have been reprinted in a cheap form. It has been stated in the public papers that she gave £2000, the profits of her "Daisy Chain," for the building of a Missionary College at Auckland, New Zealand, and devoted a great portion of the proceeds of "The Heir of Redclyffe" to the fitting out of the missionary schooner Southern Cross, for the use of Bishop Selwyn. Miss Yonge has also published "Marie Thérèse de Lamourons," a biography abridged from the French; "The Kings of England," "Landmarks of History: Ancient, Middle Ages, and Modern," forming a compendium of Universal History for young people; "History of Christian Names and their Derivation," 1863; "The Story of English Missionary Workers," in Macmillan's Sunday Library, 1871; "Lady Hester," 1873; "Life of John Coleridge Patteson, Missionary Bishop of the Melanesian Islands," 2 vols., 1873; "Stories of English History," 1874; "Stories of Greek History for the Little Ones," 1876; "Aunt Charlotte's German History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Aunt Charlotte's Roman History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Unknown to History: a Story of the Mary of Scotland," a novel, 1882; "Stray Pearls; Margaret de Ribaultmont, Viscountess de laise," 2 vols., 1883; "The Shield" and "Nuttie's Folly," "The Reputed Changeling," "The Penniless Princesses," "The Grimms of the Ben Becula," "The Education," "The Release," Ten pages for the National Society, Elderfield, Otterbourne.

LAGAN, MOST REV. W. D.

YORK, H.R.H. George
K.G., K.T., K.P., &c., second son of Prince and Princess of Wales, born at Marlborough House on July 17, 1864, seventeen months after his father, the late Duke of Clarence. His two brothers were inseparable, and they entered the navy as cadets on June 5, 1877. At sea he spent in the Britannia the summer of 1878, and in the Bacchante, which was then a cruising squadron under the command of the Earl of Clanwilliam. His voyage was made to the Cape thence to the West Indies, and thence to the West Indies. The Princes messing in the ship, and other cadets, but having seen under the poop, and not being allowed to keep the middle watch. They were at Barbadoes on Christmas Day, and there and elsewhere the Princes were enthusiastically received. At home he laid the foundation stone of the new House; thence the Bacchante to Cowes. For a short time she was to the Channel Fleet, but passed to Lord Clanwilliam at Vigo on June 1, 1880. Prince George was then shipman. The Bacchante sailed to Madeira, thence to the Monte Video. Crossing the Atlantic, the Princes, with much good fortune, through the usual ceremonial ports of call were the Cape, Simon's Bay, and afterwards a stay was made round Australia and neighbouring islands. Thence they went to China, and after visiting places of interest, returned to the Cape via Singapore and Jaffa, and from Jaffa through Palestine, the voyage, of which an interesting account has been published. Prince George promoted Sub-Lieutenant, and joined H.M.S. Canada on the Canadian station, and in October 1881, after passing his examination with great credit, he became a Lieutenant. Attached successively to various ships, he was appointed in 1886 to the

and afterwards to H.M.S. Alexander, flagship of the Mediterranean fleet, which his uncle, the Duke of Edinburgh, then Commander-in-Chief. In 1889 presented with his first command, torpedo-boat No. 79, for the period of naval manœuvres. While in charge of small craft he was able to afford efficient help to a vessel in distress. On July 6, 1890, he commissioned the first torpedo-boat Thrush, and in her he spent some time on the North American station, visiting Canada and Jamaica, where he took part in the exhibition, gaining much popularity ashore as well as afloat. Upon his return to England in 1891 Prince George promoted Commander, and in October of the same year, while staying with his father in Dublin, contracted a dangerous illness. In August 1892 he commissioned a second-class cruiser Milampus, and took command of the naval manœuvres. His latest command afloat was H.M.S. Crescent, a torpedo vessel, and during the commission of 1898 he visited many seaport towns in Scotland and Ireland. Prince George created Duke of York, Earl of Inverburgh and Baron Killarney in 1892, in the year he became heir to the Throne on the lamented death of his elder brother. He was promoted Captain in the royal navy in January 1893, and the following year his engagement to Princess Victoria (Princess May) of Teck was publicly announced, and the marriage was celebrated on July 6, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The ceremony was a very brilliant one, all the members of the Royal Family being present, together with the Emperor of Russia, at that time Czar, and the King and Queen of Denmark. His heir was born to the Duke and Duchess on June 23, 1894, and was christened after the patron saints of these names, and his grandfather, Edward and Christian George Andrew Patrick. Another son, Prince Albert, was born in December 1895, and a daughter, Princess Victoria, in April 1897. In January 1894 the Duke of York was compelled to decline an invitation to visit Australia which was conveyed to him through the Emperor of Victoria, but in November he went with the Prince of Wales at the request of the Czar at St. Petersburg. In 1895 he presided at the 6th International Geographical Congress, which was held at the Imperial Institute. In August and September 1897 the Duke and Duchess made a visit to Ireland, and were received with the utmost enthusiasm in all parts of the country. They visited Dublin, where they opened the Textile Exhibition, Killybegs, the Shannon District, Kerry, and so on. His Royal Highness holds the Grand Cross of the Sultan of Turkey and the Grand Cross of the Orders of the Black and Red Eagle of Germany. He is also Naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Colonel of the Royal Sussex Hussars Yeomanry Cavalry, and Colonel of the 3rd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers. In 1894 he was elected an Elder Brother and Master of the Corporation of Trinity House, and is annually re-elected. He is also a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, an LL.D. of Cambridge, a Fellow of the Royal Society, and has been appointed (March 1899) President of the Royal Humane Society in succession to the Duke of Argyll, who for forty years occupied that position.

YORK, H.R.H. Victoria Mary, Duchess of York, is the daughter of H.R.H. Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, cousin of her Majesty the Queen, and was born on May 26, 1867. She was married on July 6, 1893, to H.R.H. the Duke of York, and she has three children, viz., Prince Edward, born June 23, 1894; Prince Albert, born Dec. 14, 1895; and Princess Victoria Alexandra, born April 25, 1897. Her Royal Highness possesses the Royal Order of Victoria and Albert, and the Imperial Order of the Crown of India.

YORKE-DAVIES, Nathaniel Edward, L.R.C.P. Lond. 1871, M.R.C.S. Eng. 1866, L.S.A., 1865, and L.M. Dub. 1865, was born April 26, 1841, at Llanwrst, where his father was Head-master of King Edward the Sixth Grammar School. Prior to entering St. Bartholomew's Hospital he was educated at Cheltenham and other schools. After a brief period of service in the Egyptian navy he applied himself to the special study of dietetics, upon which subject he is now generally recognised as one of the greatest living authorities. There can be no doubt that his careful investigations will greatly tend to promote the increase both of health and longevity. Mr. Yorke-Davies is the author of numerous and valuable works upon the topic to which he has devoted the greater part of his leisure during the past quarter of a century. The most important of these are: "One Thousand Medical Maxims and Surgical Hints," 1885; "Aids to Long Life," 1886; "Foods for the Fat," "Dietetics of Obesity," 1889; "Living to Eat and Eating to Live," 1891; "Health and Condition," 1894; "Homburg and its Waters," 1897; "On the International Consumption of Meat in its Relation to Obesity," Lancet; "Thyroid Tabloids in Obesity," Brit. Med. Journ., 1894; "500 Cases of Obesity successfully treated by Scientific Dieting, with Table of Results," Prov. Med. Journ. 1893, &c. His work on "Health and Condition" has passed through several editions. Address: 44 Harley Street, W.

Again, in 1877, he returned to the Pandora for a second attempt, with the same objects in view; but the Admiralty having been unexpectedly called upon to communicate with the depots of the Government Expedition in Smith's Sound, Captain Young readily responded to an invitation to fulfil that important duty, which he did at no small risk, and in a manner which was deemed thoroughly satisfactory. In recognition of this service the Queen conferred on him the honour of knighthood, March 12, 1877. An account of the "Two Voyages of the Pandora in 1875 and 1876" was published in London in 1879. In 1882 he commanded the Hope, sent out in search of the Eira Arctic ship, which had been lost in Franz Joseph Sound, and rescued the crew of the latter vessel. During the Egyptian war he was present at the operations at Suakin as commissioner afloat to the National Aid Society. Sir Allen Young was created C.B. in 1881, and is Knight Commander of the Imperial Order of Franz Joseph of Austria, Commander of the Order of the Dannebrog, Denmark, and of the Order of Minister, M.P., in 1884. He is the author of several works relating to the Colonies generally, including, among others, "Reasons for Promoting the Cultivation of New Zealand Flax," "Transplantation: the System of Emigration," "Long Ago and Now," "New Zealand: Past, Present, and Future," "England and her Colonies at the Paris Exhibition," "On the Political Relations of Mother Countries and Colonies," "An Address on Imperial Federation," "Emigration to the Colonies," and as editor of an important work entitled "Imperial Federation," published in 1876, and another entitled "A Senate for the Empire," published in 1895. "A Winter Tour in South Africa" was published in 1890. Sir Frederick Young was created C.M.G. for his services on behalf of the Colonies. He was for many years Honorary Secretary, and afterwards one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal Colonial Institute. He is also on the Commission of the Peace for Middlesex, Westminster, the County of London, and the Liberty of the Tower, and a Deputy-tenant of the Tower Hamlets. He married, in 1845, Cecilia, daughter of Mr. James Drane, of Torquay; she died in 1890. Addresses: 5 Queensberry Place, N.W.; and Athenæum.

YOUNG, Sir George, Bart., LL.D., A., J.P., Charity Commissioner, was born at Cookham on Sept. 15, 1837, and is the eldest son of the second baronet, whom he succeeded in 1848, and of a daughter of William Mackworth Praed, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was elected Fellow in 1862. While at the University he gained the Leys Prize for an essay on "Greek Literature in England," and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1864. He has served on various Royal Commissions, and was Secretary of the Factory and Workshops Acts Commission in 1875, and of the Irish Land Acts Commission in 1881. He was appointed a Charity Commissioner in 1882, and was President of the Senate of University College, London, from 1881 to 1886. He has been a leader in the movement in favour of a Teaching University for London. He is the author of a Report to Government on Friendly Societies, has published essays, "Political Poems," 1888, and is editor of the poems of Winthrop Mackworth Praed. Addresses: Formosa Place, Cookham; and Athenæum.

bright, born 1819, educated at Dumfries and Edinburgh, was called to the Scotch Bar in 1840; Solicitor-General for Scotland 1862-63, and again 1868-69. He was Lord Advocate 1869-74. Mr. Young was Sheriff of Inverness-shire from 1853 till 1860, and of Berwick and Haddington from 1860 till 1862. In April 1865, on the retirement of Sir W. Dunbar, Bart., he was elected member in the Liberal interest for the Wigtown Burghs, and was again returned in 1865, 1868, and 1874. He was raised to the Bench in 1874. In 1872 he was made a Privy Councillor. In 1846 he married Janet, daughter of G. Graham Bell, Crurie, Dumfriesshire. Addresses: 28 Moray Place, Edinburgh, &c.; and Athenæum.

YOUNG, Sydney, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.C.S., F.I.C., third son of Edward Young, a Liverpool merchant and Justice of the Peace for the county of Lancashire, was born on Dec. 29, 1857, at Farnworth, near Widnes, Lancashire. His early education was conducted at a private school in Southport, and at the Royal Institution, Liverpool. After spending two years in business, Sydney Young entered the Owens College in 1876, and studied there for five years, becoming an Associate of the College in 1880. He matriculated with honours at the London University in 1877, passed the 1st B.Sc. with honours in Physics in 1879, and was awarded the Scholarship in Chemistry at the final B.Sc. examination in 1880. He obtained the degree of Doctor of Science in 1883. During his stay at the Owens College a Chemical Society was founded by the students, and he and Arthur Smithells, now Professor of Chemistry at Leeds, were elected joint Secretaries of the Society. It was at this time that Professor Carnelly made the discovery that ice, when exposed to very low pressures, could not be liquefied even on the application of great heat, and at Sir Henry Roscoe's suggestion Mr. Young showed the experiment to the Society, and at the same time drew attention to the probable explanation of the behaviour of ice under these conditions. Afterwards in Bristol, in conjunction with Professor Ramsay, he obtained an experimental verification of this explanation. After undertaking an investigation on "Alcoholic Fluorides" at the Owens College, Mr. Young spent a year in Professor Fittig's laboratory at the University of Strasburg, and there carried out a research on "Ethyl-valero-lactone" and other compounds. In 1882 Dr. Young was appointed Lecturer and Demonstrator of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, and during the following five years he was engaged in original work, chiefly in physical chemistry, jointly with Professor Ramsay. On the retirement of Dr. Williamson in 1887 from the Professorship of Chemistry at University College, London, Professor Ramsay was appointed as his successor, and Dr. Young was then elected to the Chair of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, a post which he still retains. Dr. Young was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1893, a Fellow of the London Chemical Society in 1881, a Member of the Berlin Chemical Society in 1882, a Member of the London Physical Society in 1886, and a Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry in 1888. He served on the Council of the Chemical Society from 1894 to 1898, and of the Physical Society from 1894 to 1897. He was President of the Bristol Naturalists' Society from 1894 to 1897, and of the Physical and Chemical Section of the Society from 1893 to 1896. He was External Examiner in Chemistry for the Victoria University from 1893 to 1896. Dr. Young is the author of numerous memoirs in Inorganic, Organic, and Physical Chemistry, which have been published by the Royal Society, the London and Berlin Chemical Societies, the Physical Society, the Society of Chemical Industry, and in the Philosophical Magazine and Nature. Many of the researches are on the vapour pressures, specific volumes and critical constants of inorganic and organic compounds, and on the generalisations of Van der Waals regarding corresponding temperatures, pressures, and volumes; and he has described new methods and apparatus for determining the specific volumes of liquids and saturated vapours, for fractional distillation, for the preparation of ketones, for showing the volatilisation of ice, &c. He is also the author of "Questions on Physics" (Rivingtons, now Longmans), and of articles on "Distillation," "Sublimation," and "Thermometers," in Thorpe's "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry." Addresses: 10 Windsor Terrace, Clifton, Bristol; and University College, Bristol.

YOUNG, Sir William Mackworth, K.C.S.I., M.A., the third son of Sir George Young, Bart., was born in 1840, and educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge. He entered the Indian Civil Service in 1862, and was sent to the Punjab as Assistant-Commissioner, 1863. He became Deputy-Commissioner in 1875, and in the same year Superintendent of the State of Kapurthala. Two years later he was Secretary to the Government of the Punjab, and was promoted to be a Commissioner in 1887. In 1893 he was a member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and President of the Indian Hemp Drugs Commission in the same year. Having been Resident at Mysore in 1897, he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the latter year, receiving the K.C.S.I. He married the eldest daughter of Sir J. K.C.S.I. Address: Lahore.

YOUNGHUSBAND, Lieut. Charles Wright, C.B., F.R.S. of the late Major-General Younghusband, R.A., and was born at Fort. N.B., on June 2, 1840, educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the service in 1857. He was engaged in the Magnetic and Meteorological Survey of Toronto, Canada, in 1849, and during the same year assisted the late Sir E. Bulwer in arranging the results of the taken at various observatories through the Crimean campaign sent at Inkerman, at which he was with two companies. He came to the Royal Artillery in 1854, and he was employed from 1857 to 1860, in superintending the manufacture of swords, bayonets, &c., in Germany. General Younghusband was a member of the Ordnance Survey from 1860 to 1867, and he acted as Commissioner for the material at the Paris Exhibition of 1867 to 1873 he was Superintendent of the Royal Gunpowder and Saltpetre at Waltham Abbey, and following five years he acted in a similar capacity at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, where he retired in 1880. He married Mary, daughter of the Hon. J. of Toronto, she died in 1880. 12 Castle Hill Avenue, F. the Athenaeum.

YOUNGHUSBAND, Capt. Francis Edward, C.I.E., was born in 1845 and is the second son of J. W. Younghusband, C.S.I., the 1st Dragoon Guards in 1860, and entered the Staff Corps. He was attached to the Political Agent at British Agent in Central India, known for his explorations in 1893, and has received the of the Royal Geographical Society in 1891 he was created C.I.E. His important works are "Himalayas" and the "Relief of the latter work was written in with Captain G. J. Younghusband.

YOXALL, James H., M.A., (hon. cand.), Camb., was 57, at Redditch, Worcestershire, he attended a public elementary school. In his fourteenth year he went to become a pupil-teacher, and an assistant-teacher, in a Sheffield School. For two years he was a member of the Westminster Training College. Returning to Sheffield, he was promoted to a headmastership, under his charge the Sharrow Lane School became well known for the success of the educational system he originated there, bringing literature and music to bear on the various subjects of instruction, and attracting visits from educationalists from all parts of the United Kingdom and the Empire. By articles in magazines, lectures on many platforms, he contributed materially in the downfall of the system known as "Payment by Results" schools, and much of the reform accomplished since 1890 has been due to his efforts.

In 1892 the members of the National Union of Teachers elected him president, and a few months later appointed him General Secretary of that organization, which under his care has remarkably grown in influence, and has now doubled in numbers. He was successful as a parliamentary candidate in Westlaw in 1892, but the efforts he made secured for him an invitation to stand for Nottingham (West), a seat he won in 1895. In 1894 he was named a Royal Commissioner on Secondary Education in England, and has come to be regarded as an authority on all matters pertaining to schools, both in the House of Commons and in the country. He received the degree of M.A. (honoris causa) conferred on him by the University of Cambridge in recognition of his services to the cause of public education. He is the author of "Secondary Education," 1896; "The Lonely Pyramid," 1890; "Nut-brown Roger and I," and editor of "The Children's Stories," "Stories for the Schoolroom," Addresses: 7 Pagoda Avenue, Richmond, Surrey; and 71 Russell Square, London, rising which took place in March 1849. He escaped, and in consequence of the amnesty granted by the Austrian Government, subsequently returned to Brescia, where, from 1851 to 1859, he lived as a private teacher of jurisprudence. When Lombardy became free in 1859 Zanardelli sat in the Piedmontese Legislature in several Parliaments for Isco. In 1866 he became commissario regio of the Province of Belluno, under the Ministry of Ricasoli. In 1869 he sat on the commission of inquiry into the tobacco Regia. At the Lombard bar Zanardelli enjoyed a very high reputation as an advocate. After the Ministerial crisis of 1876 he became Minister of Public Works in the first Depretis Cabinet, which portfolio he resigned in November 1877, in consequence of differences with Depretis, which made it impossible for him to sign, as Minister of Public Works, the Railway Convention arranged by the latter. He was appointed to the Home Office in the Cairoli Ministry in March 1878, and went into opposition on its fall. He was Minister of Justice and Cults under the various Crispi Ministries, and the new Italian Penal Code, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1890, is chiefly due to him. In 1894, on the fall of the Giolitti Ministry, he tried to form a Cabinet, but had to give place to Signor Crispi, whose bitter and factious enemies he then joined. This hostility caused him to be beaten in a provincial election at Brescia, his own home, in May 1895. The general election immediately ensued. After the general election of March 1897 the Marquis di Rudini has mainly relied for support in Parliament on the combined parties of Giolitti and Zanardelli.

ZANGWILL, Israel, was born in London of poor Jewish parents in 1864, but his early childhood was passed mainly in Plymouth and in Bristol, where he attended the Red Cross Street Middle Class School, reaching the highest class but one before his parents returned to London, in his ninth year. The boy was placed in the Jews' Free School, an immense institution in Spitalfields, where in due course he became head boy, thrice carrying off the scholarships and medals founded to commemorate the admission of Jews into Parliament. He remained at the school as a teacher, and after the laborious work of the day studied for a degree at London University, where he graduated B.A. with triple honours before he was twenty-one. He also took the highest possible teachers' certificate. He had scribbled from childhood, and in his sixteenth year a prize serial from his pen ran through a London weekly, but it was not till he had graduated that he was able

ZANARDELLI, Giuseppe, an Italian lawyer, was born in 1826, in Brescia. He became a student in the Ghislieri University of Pavia, and took his degree as Doctor of Law in 1848. He enrolled himself in the legion of students which was formed at that time, and took part in the struggle for independence. Returning to Brescia in August 1848, he there prepared the

to turn seriously to literature. He began a partnership with a friend, which developed into a long fantastic romance called "The Premier and the Painter," which was published in 1888, and has passed through several editions. Before its publication his desire to introduce reforms in the scholastic routine had brought him into conflict with the authorities, and he resigned his position, and, being penniless, was about to canvass for advertisements, when he found a less humble professional opening. Two years later he founded London Punch, which had a short but merry life of a couple of years, during which Mr. Zangwill also came into notice as a speaker in the debates of the Playgoers' Club. The death of Arnold, and the publication, in 1891, of "The Bachelors' Club," which was an instant success on both sides of the Atlantic, enabled Mr. Zangwill to devote himself to literature, and in 1892 he enrolled himself among the serious novelists by his "Children of the Ghetto," a study from the life of a section of humanity hitherto neglected or distorted in fiction, which provoked especial controversy in America, and which has been translated into many languages. In "The Old Man's Club," 1892, Mr. Zangwill supplied a pendant to "The Bachelors' Club," and the two are now paradoxically united in one volume as "The Celibates' Club." In a couple of novelettes, "The Big Bow Mystery," 1891, and "Merely Mary Ann," 1892, and in a large novel, "The Master," 1895, devoted to problems of art and life, Mr. Zangwill sought more serious inspiration outside the Ghetto, though he has returned to it in his "Dreamers of the Ghetto," 1898, life-stories of the great Jews of the last four centuries, which appeared simultaneously in several forms, English, American, Colonial, and Continental. "Ghetto Tragedies," 1898 (just expanded, by the addition of many new stories, into "They That Walk in Darkness," 1900), and "The King of Schnorrers, Grottesques and Fantasies," 1894, complete the list of his Jewish studies, though he has also written, in essay form, upon "English Judaism" in the Jewish Quarterly Review, on "The Position of Judaism" in the New American Review, and on "Zionism" in Leopoldine. In lighter essay vein he has discoursed on all topics in "Without Prejudice," 1897, a collection of prose and verse, mainly from the Pall Mall Magazine. The poems contributed to many other periodicals still await collection. Mr. Zangwill has lectured on "The Drama as a Fine Art," "The Ghetto," and "Fiction, the Highest Form of Truth," throughout Great Britain, Ireland, Holland, and the United States of America. He lectured at Jerusalem, and through Palestine in 1897. Mr. Zangwill has written for Italy, and has lived in the Quarters of Paris. As a result of his desire for a free press, he represented a political party, one of which, "Socialism," ran at the Haymarket election, autumn of 1890, and has since from his own pen issued a novel, "Children of the Ghetto," liberally illustrated in the New York Times, under the pen-name of the author. Address, 24, Bedford Square, N.W.

ZANZIBAR. Sultan of BIN MAHOMED.

ZELLER. Eduard, Geographical and political science, Kleinodtswar in Wurtemberg, 1814, and studied at Tübingen. In 1847 he became Professor at Berne, in 1848 at Marburg, Professor of Philosophy, and subsequently in Berlin, since remained. His principal works: "Platonic Studies," 1840; "Of Greek Philosophy," 1841; "Critical Study of the H. Apostles," 1854; "State," 1872; "Strauss, His Life," 1874; and his chief work, "Of German Philosophy," 1873. Several sections of "Greek Philosophy," which is a standard work on the subject, used in the English University, have been translated into English by Miss S. F. Alleyne. One of his works also is entitled "Grosse als Philosophie."

ZENKER. Wilhelm, Professor in Berlin, May 2, 1829, and died in that city, where also he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He was for many years a natural scientist, but has now written many memoirs on subjects of which may be mentioned sexual degeneracy. "Memoir on the Degeneration of Africa found by Gerh. H. Zöllner," for Entomology, Venusdurchgang, 1874, 1875, logischer Kalender, 1880, heilung der Wärme auf der Erde, 1888.

ZETLAND. Marquis of Hon. Lawrence Dundas, born on Aug. 16, 1844, and son of the first Earl of

of the second, whom he succeeded

He was created Marquis in 1892. He has been a lieutenant in the Royal Guards, a captain in the Yorkshire Army, a Lord-in-Waiting, and Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in Lord Salisbury's administration, when he succeeded Marquis of Londonderry, 1886-92. He was a Member of Parliament for North Riding, and a Colonel in the Royal Artillery. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1889. In 1871 he married Lady Helena Elizabeth Lumley, daughter of the Earl of Scarborough. Addresses: Grosvenor Street, S.W.; and Aske, Richmond, Yorks., &c.

ZIMMERMANN, Agnes Marie, was born at Cologne on July 5, 1847. At four years of age she came to England, and after residing under her father and one or two masters, was entered at nine years of age as a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where Cipriani Potter was her teacher at the piano, and Dr. Steggall her harmony. On Cipriani Potter's death in 1860, Herr Ernst Pauer became the young student's piano master, and she then began to study composition with Professor Macfarren. She continued to work hard, and while yet a pupil composed several works, instrumental and vocal, which were performed at the Royal Academy of Music Students' Concerts. In 1860 she won the King's Scholarship, and the same year her honour fell to her in 1862; in the following year she won the Silver Medal, and on Dec. 5 she made what may be termed her first appearance, at a concert at the Palace. In 1864 Miss Zimmermann went to Germany, where she performed at the Leipzig Gewandhaus Concerts before the Court of Hanover, and elsewhere. Returning to England, she continued to play widely in public favour. In 1879, 1881, 1882, and 1886 Miss Zimmermann played at many public concerts in England—at Hamburg, Düsseldorf, Brunswick, Berlin, Frankfurt, Leipzig, Halle, and elsewhere, as well as privately to the Courts at Berlin, Darmstadt, and Brussels. In many seasons she has regularly taken part in the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts, and has played in most of the principal cities and at the principal places abroad. Miss Zimmermann's own compositions are well known to musicians, and her editions of Beethoven's and Chopin's Sonatas are standard works for students. She has been engaged on the edition of Schumann's works, the first of which was published in 1890. Address: 13 Portman Square, W.

ZERN, Helen, was born in the same town of Hamburg, March 25, 1846, but has lived in England since 1850, and is a naturalised British subject. She is the author of "Stories in Precious Stones," 1873; "Schopenhauer, his Life and Philosophy," 1876; "Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, his Life and his Works," 1878; "Half Hours with Foreign Novelists," 1880; "Tales from the Edda," illustrated by Kate Greenaway, 1882; and a paraphrase of the Persian poet, Firdusi, issued under the title of "The Epic of Kings," and illustrated with etchings by Alma-Tadema, R.A., 1882; "Life of Maria Edgeworth," 1883; "The Hanse Towns," 1889; an edition of the "Comedies of Goldoni," 1892; and a translation of the "Pentamerone," new edition, 1893. She also writes much for periodicals and for English, American, German, and Italian newspapers. Address: 2 Via Leone Decimo, Florence.

ZOLA, Émile, French novelist and patriot, was born in Paris, 10 Rue St. Joseph, April 2, 1840, of a French mother, Emilie Aubert, and an Italian father, an eminent civil engineer, whose work, "Un Traité de Nivellement," gained him the membership of the Academy of Padua. François Zola is best known by the "Canal Zola" at Aix; he was born in 1796 at Venice, and died at Marseille in 1847, leaving his family very badly off. His more famous son, Émile, passed his boyhood at Aix, where he studied at the local college, and came to Paris in February 1858. He obtained a scholarship at the Lycée St. Louis, where he was a pupil of Levasseur, who predicted the success of the future novelist on reading an essay of his on "Milton dictating to his Daughter." All the same he failed to pass his baccalauréat, being rejected in literature in the révision. In 1860 he left the Lycée, and after working at the docks for two months, he preferred starvation and threw up his post. Towards the end of 1861 he obtained an introduction to Messrs. Hachette, the well-known publishers, and started in their office, first as a shopman at £4 a month, and afterwards as a clerk, when they saw his worth. He employed his leisure in writing short tales, which were afterwards published under the title of "Contes à Ninon" (Oct. 24, 1864). During the next year he wrote tales for the Petit Journal and La Vie Parisienne; and a collection of articles for the Salut Public of Lyon, which were afterwards published under the title of "Mes Haines." This same year (1865) saw the publication of "La Confession de Claude," and on Jan. 31, 1866, he resigned his position at Hachette's, convinced that he could earn his living by his pen. Villemessant employed him to write reviews for the Événement, and afterwards a set of articles novels of the nineteenth century, second only to Balzac's "Comédie Humaine." Up to now Zola had achieved no great success, in spite of his six published volumes. Then came to him the idea of bringing the scientific laws of heredity within the scope of romance, and he drew up, after eight months' hard work in libraries, museums, and the streets, the now famous genealogical tree of the family of the Rougons (to be found in "Une Page d'Amour" and in "Docteur Pascal"). In 1869 he went to his publisher, Lacroix, and offered to write twelve volumes of a series to be styled "Les Rougon-Macquart," and the contract was signed in May of that year. He applied his theory to the document humain, and in doing so he had to master the technical details of most professions, trades, and occupations. In June 1870 the Siècle began the publication of the first of the series, "La Fortune des Rougon"; but the war soon interrupted its course, and it appeared in volume form in 1871. In his preface he explains his object to be to show how a family can produce ten or twenty individuals representing all the

he more justly proud of the efforts of his own brain, and his publishers gave him the rôle of a léjeûner at which all literary Paris is present. On July 14, 1888, he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and five years afterwards an Officer.

From 1891 till 1894 he was President of the Société des Gens de Lettres. In the years that the Rougon-Macquarts was appearing M. Zola also wrote many critical articles, which were afterwards published as "Le Roman Experimental," "Les Romanciers Naturalistes," and "Documents Littéraires." We must not forget to mention here that most of his short story "L'Attaque du Fort," published in a book entitled "Contes et nouvelles choisies de Médan," 1880, a volume published after his home near Paris, in which appeared Guy de Maupassant's "Boule de Suif." It is a pathetic incident of the Franco-Prussian War, and has been made the subject of a well-known opera. A new series of critical articles appeared in the Revue during 1880-81, which have been collected as "Une Campagne." In 1893 he visited London on the invitation of the Institute of Journalists, whom he lectured on the subject of "Anonymity in Journalism." The next year he commenced the writing of three novels, which he called "Trois Villes"—Lourdes, Rome, and Paris.

The first was a lurid picture of the pilgrimages to the southern coast, the next, a book upon the Eternal City, and the last, a mass of documents which do not give a very clear idea of L'Assommoir. In these three works he endeavored to represent the progress of an individual, the Abbé Pierre Froment, in freethought, after discovering that the salvation of society is not to be found in Catholic faith. It must not be forgotten that although a just appreciation of Zola is a commonplace of literary criticism in these days, very few years ago he was almost entirely neglected.

Since his translators and publishers were treated as common law, in 1897 he achieved the unusual distinction of having a whole book written about his brain. This was a study by Dr. J. Toulouse, of the Paris Faculty of Medicine, entitled "Enquête Médico-Psychologique sur les Rapports de la Supériorité Intellectuelle avec la Névropathie," is an inquiry similar to that pursued by Mr. J. F. Nesbit's well-known novel, the "Insanity of Genius." In it we find every possible particular of the novelist's physical and mental life traced to the date of publication. In that, as in early years he endured extreme privation, he was correspondingly affected. With increased prosperity came increased nervousness, until in 1887 he decided to diet himself. Dr. Toulouse ascribes M. Zola's best work to the period when he was still a fat man; that is, anterior to "La Terre." He now diets himself rigorously: at nine, on rising, he partakes of a crust of dry bread, drinking nothing with it; he lunches lightly at one, again taking nothing to drink; immediately after this meal he goes out of doors, so as to avoid falling asleep; at five he has tea, and he dines, lightly and without drinking, at half-past seven. At ten he drinks two cups of tea. He has given up smoking, and he refrains entirely from wine except for an occasional glass after bicycling. The year 1898 was a momentous one in the novelist's life. Captain Alfred Dreyfus, condemned in 1894, had been languishing for three years off the fever-stricken coast of Cayenne; during those three years his devoted family and friends had been struggling to obtain a revision of his so-called trial. They could gain no hearing, but Zola, once convinced of the injustice that had been done, and supremely careless of all personal consequences, compelled France and the entire world to listen to his case. His letter j'accuse was published in M. Clémenceau's journal L'Aurore on January 13, 1898. It had been preceded by two letters, "Lettre à la Jeunesse" and "Lettre à la France." The sensation created was enormous, and he was immediately prosecuted for having said that the judges who tried Esterhazy had acquitted him by order. The trial took place in Paris from 7th to the 23rd of February, and was the one subject of interest at the time. People waited for hours for a chance of a peep into the court, and the courageous author had to be protected by the police from the attacks of a brutal mob. The evidence was strongly in favour of M. Zola's contentions, namely, that Dreyfus had been condemned illegally, that the facts against him had been without significance, and that the bordereau was written not by Dreyfus, but by Esterhazy. But General de Boisdeffre, the chief of the General Staff, came forward and threatened the jury with the resignation of the whole staff if Zola were acquitted, and in the end he was condemned to the maximum penalty, in spite of the heroic efforts of his counsel, M. Labori (q.v.). He appealed against this decision, and the trial was quashed on an informality; again the military authorities decided to prosecute him, and he was again condemned, this time by default, at Versailles. Whereupon he left the country and came to England, where he lived in retirement in a village near Birmingham until the Court of Cassation gave its judgment on the whole question of revision. In consequence of his condemnation the Chancellor of the Legion of Honour erased his name from the roll, and François de Pressensé (q.v.) and others voluntarily gave up the order as well. His technical offence was defamation of a tribunal, i.e. saying Esterhazy had been acquitted by order; but his real offence was making himself the mouth-piece of the intelligent and thoughtful portion of the French public. He has dared to stand up for truth and liberty at a moment when many saw the peril of such conduct, but no other was ready to brave the extremity of personal danger in order to aid in averting it. Posterity will look beyond the studied intemperance of his language and will see in him a man who refused to sit still while a great wrong was being perpetrated. He challenged the corruption of the Jesuits, and wrote the novel, "Fécondité" in the feuilleton in the Le Figaro. The life led by the hero is Mathieu's, and the priest, Pierre, is the protagonist of Trois Villes." English is by London, 1893), and books have been written against him during his life in France. His death was at Brussels.

APPENDIX

UL AZIZ, Sultan of Morocco, was born in 1880, and at the age of fourteen, was unexpectedly raised to the throne on the succession to his father, Muley Ismail, whose death from dysentery occurred very suddenly on June 7, 1894.

Sultan, whose succession was in accordance with his father's wishes, was proclaimed at Fez on June 12. For a short time his position was threatened by Muley Abd el Kader, the eldest son of the late Sultan, but the rebel was seized and imprisoned on the 19th. On the 25th he married the daughter of Muley Ershid, his uncle. Subsequently he dismissed his former Vizier and the Grand Chamberlain, and replaced them by friends. The old ministers were then arrested on a charge of plotting to murder the Sultan. The energetic boy despot entered Fez to the popular rejoicing in July, and firmly established himself on the throne by the death of Muley Omar, his uncle (July 23). The Sultan, usually termed "Emperor" by Europeans, is at the head of religion as well as of the State. He is absolute ruler over his people, but many outlying tribes do not acknowledge his authority. His intercourse with foreigners, especially with our own ministers, Sir Robert Bunsen and Sir Arthur Nicolson, has been in the main most cordial. He has officially recognised a British Vice-Consul at Fez.

DR. CARL ABEL, Dr. Ph., M.S.G.L., Professor under the Prussian Government of Public Instruction, the son of a Berlin banker, was born at Berlin, July 1, 1837; studied Philology, National History, and History at the Universities of Berlin, Munich, and Tübingen; travelled extensively for the purposes of linguistic research in England, France, Switzerland, Russia, and America. He has devoted himself chiefly to the comparative study of significations and the more remote branches of national psychology dependent upon the appreciation of meanings. He showed linguistic concepts to be largely national, and their comparison the best means of gauging the intellectual stages of a race; examined the historical stages of significative development; made inquiry into sundry linguistic conceptions of the English, French, German, Russian, Polish, Egyptian, and

Hebrew idioms; analysed the prehistoric origin of meanings through a combination of Indo-Germanic and Egyptian etymology; disclosed in the course of these labours an identity of roots, stems, and primary phonetic and conceptional laws in the two families of speech; proved these common primary laws, while they did not interfere with the separate laws of later times, to reveal a much more ancient and more perspicuous period of etymology, which unfolds the prehistoric growth and history of reason; demonstrated the primitive variability of sound and sense, the inversion of both and the multiplicity of etymological connections and transitions resulting therefrom; extended his investigations to Semitic affinities; sifted, on the basis of facts established, the origin of language, the growth of signification, and the theory of synonyms. Professor Carl Abel has acted as Ilchester Lecturer on Comparative Slavonic and Latin Lexicography at Oxford University; lectured on various etymological and semasiological topics at the Royal Asiatic Society, the Royal Literary Society, the Berlin Philological, Philosophical, and Anthropological Society; taught, as Ordinary Docent, Philosophical and Comparative Linguistics as well as English, French, German, and Latin Synonymy in the Berlin Humboldt Academy of Science; was linguistic assistant to the German Foreign Office and the Berlin Law Courts; served as Berlin Correspondent to the Times and Standard; was a contributor to various English and German philological and general periodicals. Professor Carl Abel reads all European and several Oriental languages. The following is a list of his principal writings: "Linguistic Essays," London, 1880 (history and theory of signification, synonymy, countersense, origin of language, Latin order of words); "Sprachwissenschaftliche Abhandlungen," Leipzig, 1885 (an amplified German edition of the foregoing); "Slavic and Latin," Ilchester Lectures on Comparative Lexicography delivered at the University of Oxford, London, 1881; "Gross- und Klein-Russisch. Aus Ilchester Vorlesungen übersetzt von R. Dielitz," Leipzig, 1882 (German translation of the foregoing); "Koptische Untersuchungen," Berlin, 1878, two volumes (grammatical and semasiological); "Einleitung in ein ure—which are each a third of a in length. In 1894 Sir Benjamin represented England on the question of storage of the waters of the Nile. He was elected F.R.S. in June 1890, and sat on its Council in 1892–93. Address: 2 Queen Square Place, Queen's Mansions, Westminster, S.W.; and Museum.

BISMARCK-SCHÖNHAUSEN, Herbert von, son of Prince Bismarck, was born at Berlin, Dec. 28, 1849. He served the German Empire in various diplomatic capacities, and was formerly Secretary in London, and later at the Hague. He has sat in the Reichstag as one of the members for Schleswig-Holstein, and in 1886 was Secretary of State and Assessor to the Chancellor. On his father's retirement he was officially charged with the direction of the affairs, but preferred to follow the Emperor into private life. In January 1889 the Emperor conferred on him the Order of the Red Eagle, First Class. He holds the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the army. In the summer of 1899 it was announced that the Emperor intended to prefer him to high office. In 1901 he married, in Vienna, the Princess Hoya, daughter of Count George Hoya, director and controller of the ex-Whitehead torpedo works at Fiume.

BLAKE, The Hon. Edward, Q.C., P.C. (Canada), M.P., late Canadian Minister, was born at Adelaide, Ontario, Aug. 8, 1833, and became M.A. of Toronto University, 1858. He began the practice of law in 1859, and in 1864 became a Queen's Counsel. In 1867 he was elected to the Ontario Legislature and also to the Dominion Parliament, and in 1871–72 was Premier of Ontario. This position he resigned for only one session, being obliged to do so on account of the passage of the representation Act. He became a member, in 1873, of the Canadian Cabinet in the Mackenzie administration. He served for various periods as Minister of Finance and as President of the Council. He held the offices of Chancellor of Ontario and the Justiceship of the Supreme Court of the Dominion were offered to him, but he declined both. In 1878 he, with many members of his party, was defeated in an election, but he re-entered the Parliament in the following year, and was at that time until 1887 generally recognized as the leader of the Liberal party. He was chosen Chancellor of the University of Toronto in 1876, and has held the office ever since. The honour of knighthood was declined by him in 1877. In 1891 he resigned the position of leader of the Liberal party, but retained his seat in the Dominion Parliament until 1891, when he retired from Canadian political life. He entered the British House of Commons in 1892 as member for South Longford, Ireland, having contested that constituency at the request of the leaders of the Irish Nationalist party. He was re-elected in 1895, and has taken an active part in advancing the cause of Home Rule for Ireland. He is a member of the Nationalist Parliamentary Committee. In 1889 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Toronto. He married a daughter of the Bishop of Huron.

BRETT, John, A.R.A., sea-scapist, was born in 1830, and at an early age came under the influence of Mr. Ruskin and the Pre-Raphaelites. A picture painted under this influence was the "Stone-breaker," 1858, followed in 1859 by the "Val d'Aosta." From 1870 onwards, however, he became enamoured of sea-subjects, and he has now for many years painted scenes, chiefly on the Southern and Cornish coasts, in a spirited manner not in the least suggestive of his early penchant. His principal works at the Royal Academy's Exhibitions have been: "Spires and Steeples of the Channel Islands," 1875; "Sir Thomas's Tower," 1876; "Mount's Bay," 1877; "Cornish Lions," 1878; "Carnarvon: Stronghold of the Season and Camp of the Kittywake," 1879; "Britannia's Realm," 1880 (a picture bought by the Royal Academy); "Golden Prospects: St. Catherine's Well," 1881; "The Grey of the Morning," 1882; "These Yellow Sands," 1883; "M'Leod's Maidens, Skye," 1884; "The Norman Archipelago," 1885; "Kyle-Akin," 1887; "The Earth's Shadow on the Sky," 1888; "The Outlook from My Native Cliffs," "The Isles of the Sirens," "The Sear, the Yellow Leaf," "Probably some Rain," 1895; "A Friend in Need," "North Devon Cliffs," "From the Balcony of Cliff Cottage, Lee," and "Loch Braccadaile, Skye," 1896; "Castel Moel, Isle of Skye," "The South Stack Lighthouse: the Wind Athwart the Tide," "Distant Capri," and "Whiteshell Point, Caswell Bay (limestone)," 1897; "Among the Rocks at Trevone (quartz veins in the slate)," "Trevose Head, Cornwall," "Trevone Bay: north-westerly showers," and "Where you had better not come ashore: North Cornwall," 1898; "Kylestrome, Sutherland," "Summer on the Cliffs," "The Island off Padstow," and "Étretat (west)," 1899. Address: Daisyfield, Putney, S.W.

BROGLIE, Charles Jacques Victor Albert, Duc de, eldest son of the eminent French statesman Achille Charles Léonce Victor, Duc de Broglie (who died his name in "Dorothy" and other musical pieces. In 1891, at the short-lived Royal English Opera, he created the part of Ivanhoe in the opera of that name, has sung Faust in Italian at the Opera, and was offered an engagement at La Scala, Milan. He has latterly devoted himself solely to concerts, where his perfect voice and style have won him many laurels. He has toured with great success in Germany and the United States, and in 1894 made his first appearance at the Handel Festival. Address: 6 Cork Street, W.

DAVIES, Sir Robert Henry, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born in 1824, and is the son of the late Sir David Davies, M.D. He was educated at the Charterhouse and at Haileybury College. He was Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab from 1871 to 1877, and a member of the Council of India from 1885 to 1895. He was created K.C.S.I. in 1874, and C.I.E. in 1877. He is a widower, and has been twice married. Addresses: 38 Wilton Place, S.W.; and Athenæum, &c.

DILLMANN, Christian Friedrich August, Ph.D., D.D., was born April 25, 1823, at Illingen, in the district of Maulbronn, in Würtemberg, and was educated in the Gymnasium at Stuttgart, and the Lower Evangelical Theological Seminary at Schöndal. From 1840 to 1844 he studied philosophy, Oriental philology, and theology, in the University and in the Higher Theological Seminary at Tübingen. In the autumn of 1844 he passed the first theological official examination, and then devoted another year to the study of the Oriental languages. In 1845 he became a parish vicar in Tersheim, in the district of Vaihingen, in Würtemberg. From 1846 to 1848 he made a scientific tour, visiting the libraries in Paris, in London, and at Oxford, where he received from the authorities of the libraries the proposal that he should draw up catalogues of their Æthiopic MSS. In April 1848, having returned to Würtemberg, he became Repetent in the Theological Seminary at Tübingen, and as such discharged at the same time the professorate of Old Testament Exegesis in the University for the four years during which, through the departure of Ewald, the office was vacant. In 1852 he became Privat Docent in the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen, and in 1853 was nominated by the king a Professor Extraordinary in the same Faculty. After filling various posts at Kiel and Giessen he became Professor in Ordinary of Old Testament Exegesis in the Theological Faculty of the Metropolitan University of Berlin, which office he held until May 1846 he graduated in the University of Tübingen. In 1862 Professor Dillmann received an honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Leipsic. The works he has written or edited are: Lexicon cum MSS. Orientalium; Index annico asservantur; Index Æthiopicorum continens; Codicum MSS. Biblicæ Oxoniensis, Pars VII. (1848); "The Book of Ezechiel explained," 1853; "The Jubilees, or the little books from the Æthiopic and their observations," and "The book of the Oriental Æthiopic," both in Evangelical biblischen Wissenschaft. He has also undertaken to edit the Bible in Æthiopic. Of this special portions have already appeared. In 1859 Professor Dillmann published his Grammar of the Æthiopic Language; and in 1861 his great work, the Lexicon Æthiopicæ cum Indice Latine, a large quarto size with double letterpress. In 1866 he published the Æthiopic edition of the Book of Job, or "Job" for the third edition of the Biblical Handbook. In 1867 he published the "Ascension of the Æthiopic text". He is a member of the Royal Society in Göttingen, and a Commander of the Order of Merit of the Hesse.

DOMVILLE, Vice Admiral Compton Edward, K.C.B., of the late Henry B. Domville, born in Worcestershire. He was educated at the University of Cambridge, and entered the Royal Navy in April 1856. As a Sub-Lieutenant he was specially promoted. After the Royal Yacht he obtained the H.M.S. Algerine on the coast of Africa for his skill and gallantry against pirates he was promoted in 1868. He served on the coast of Africa as Captain of H.M.S. Boer War, and in 1871 as Commodore at Jamaica. He was appointed Captain of the School, and soon after the Queen. He became Vice-Chairman of the Ordnance Committee in 1874, and of Naval Ordnance and ng year, when he also attained flag rank. He hoisted his flag as a Rear-Admiral in the Mediterranean Fleet in 1894, and in 1897 was promoted Admiral and Superintendent of Naval Affairs. This appointment carries with it the command of one of the fleets in the Manœuvres. Admiral Domville is married to Isabella, a daughter of Captain John Peel. Address: 3 Collingham Place, W.

East, Alfred, A.R.A., R.I., was born in Glasgow on Dec. 15, 1849, and was educated there and at the Government School of Art, Glasgow, and the night-school conducted by Mr. Greenlees. His father had not intended him for the profession of an artist, although he had drawn remarkably well from his earliest years, but it was only the chance of residence in London, where he made the acquaintance of the artists, which decided the direction his career should take. After leaving Glasgow he studied at the École des Beaux-Arts under Tony Fleury and Bougereau. His first Royal Academy picture, "Dewy Morning," was painted at Barbizon, of which school he was an adherent. He next painted in London, and came under the influence of the young Glasgow colourists, but, nevertheless, he is himself a brilliant master of the Impressionist style. Removing to London, he found in the Impressionist landscape the order of the day, and he gradually made his mark, and became one of the leading landscape painters of England. Soon after his return to his home he exhibited his studies at the Royal Art Society at Bond Street. A journey in Japan further influenced his colour and method. He has exhibited at the Royal Academy for many years. His recent pictures are: "Autumn Haze," "Midland Meadows," 1895; "A Hill," and "The Valley of the Chess," 1896; "The Sleepy River Somme" and "Silence of Morning," 1897; "An English Song" and "Opulent Autumn," 1898; and "The Monks' Pool, Beardsall," "A Combe in the Cotswolds," "The Shepherd's Walk, Windermere," and "The Miller's Daughter," 1899. He is a member of the Royal Institute of Water-Colour Painters and of the Council of the Royal Academy of Painter-Etchers, and became President in 1899. He is also a member of the Honorary Council of the Japan Society, and a Gold Medallist of Paris and Munich, and has won "Honours Concours" at the Salon. Address: 2 Spencer Street, Victoria Street,

ELLIS, Major-General Sir Arthur Edward Augustus, K.C.V.O., C.S.I., Sergeant-at-Arms in the House of Lords, was born at Gibraltar Dec. 13, 1837, and is the second son of Colonel the Hon. Augustus F. Ellis. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the 33rd Regiment in 1854, serving in the Crimea, and being present at the siege of Sebastopol, and at Kertch. He was A.D.C. and Military Secretary to Lord Elphinstone, Governor of Bombay from 1858 to 1862, when he exchanged as Captain to the Grenadier Guards. In 1867 he was appointed Equerry to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and was well known in that capacity until he resigned (November 1898), and was appointed Extra Equerry, January 1899. In November 1898 he was appointed Sergeant-at-Arms in Ordinary to her Majesty the Queen in the House of Lords. He is Secretary to H.M. Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851. He retired from the army in 1893, and was created C.S.I. in 1876, and K.C.V.O. in 1897. In 1864 he married a daughter of Lord Taunton. Address: 29 Portland Place, W.

ERSKINE, Admiral Sir James Elphinstone, K.C.B., second son of the late James Erskine, Esq., of Cardross, was born Dec. 2, 1838. He entered the Royal Navy in 1854, and was promoted Lieutenant in June 1859, Commander in August 1862, and Captain in November 1868. In May 1880 he was appointed Private Secretary to Lord Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty. He was Commodore on the Australian station from June 1881 to 1884, and on November 6 of the latter year hoisted the British flag at Port Moresby and proclaimed the British protectorate over the South Coast of New Guinea and the adjacent islands. Admiral Erskine was an Aide-de-Camp to the Queen for several years, and was promoted Rear-Admiral in January 1886. From February to August of the same year he sat at the Admiralty Board as a Lord Commissioner. He was senior officer on the coast of Ireland from December 1888 to December 1891, and was one of the umpires of the Naval Manœuvres of 1894. He hoisted his flag as Commander-in-Chief on the North America and West Indian Station in March 1894, and was promoted K.C.B. in June 1897, and in the following August was promoted full Admiral. In 1898 he was appointed a Commissioner to inquire into matters relating to certain French treaty rights in Newfoundland. Sir James is a J.P. for Peebles, and is married to Margaret, the eldest daughter of the Rev. John Constable, of Marston Biggott. Address: Venlaw, Peebles.

HAFFKINE, Waldemar Mordecai Wolff, C.I.E., son of the late Aaron Haffkine and Rosalie, daughter of David Landsberg, of Odessa, was born in Odessa on March 15, 1860, and is a Jew by birth and religion. He was educated in the Classical College of Berdiansk, on the Sea of Azoff, and in the University of Odessa, where he took his degree in Science in 1884, and has published, up to 1888, the following: "Recherches biologiques sur l'Astasia ocellata, n.s.," in the Annales des Sciences Naturelles, Paris, 1885; "Recherches biologiques sur l'Euglena viridis, Ehr.," ibid. 1886; "On the Nutrition of Euglenae and Astasiae," in the Memoirs of the Society of Naturalists of Nova-Rossia, Odessa, 1886 (in Russian); "On the Laws of Heredity in Application to Monocellular Organisms," ibid. 1887, and Archives de Zoologie expérimentale et générale, Paris, 1888; and a translation from the German into Russian of Klaus's text-book, "Zoologie," by Haffkine and Schulgin, Odessa, 1888. In the latter year M. Haffkine was appointed Assistant to Professor Moritz Schiff in the chair of Physiology in the University of Genova, and in 1889 went to Paris, where he published, in the Annales de l'Institut Pasteur, 1890, articles "Sur les maladies infectieuses chez les Paramécies" and vaccination against plague, has since then been applied to hundreds of thousands of individuals of various races and nationalities in India. The reduction in plague mortality effected by inoculations is estimated to average eighty per cent., approaching often one hundred per cent. He published during that period: "Plague Prophylactic," Indian Medical Journal, and British Medical Journal, 1897; "Report on the Epidemic of Plague at Amoy," by Haffkine and others, Bombay, 1897, and Indian Medical Journal, 1897; "The Protective Inoculation against Plague," Poona, 1898; "Experiment on the Effect of Protective Inoculation against the Epidemic of Plague in Undhera, Baroda," Bombay, 1898; "The Protective Inoculation against Plague in the Poona Community of Bombay during the Epidemic of 1897-98," Bombay, 1898; communicated a summary of the results to the Edinburgh Meeting of the British Medical Association of 1898, published in the British Medical Journal under the title of "The Testing of Haffkine's Prophylactic in the Plague-Stricken Communities in India," by Haffkine and others. The Government Plague Research Laboratory, founded and organised by Haffkine, manufactures the prophylactic at present at the rate of some ten million doses a day, and has supplied, in addition to Indian demands, those also for the Transvaal, Cape Colony, Mauritius, Natal, Zanzibar, the Gold Coast, Ceylon, Hong-Kong, and Russian Asia. In April 1899 he returned to England on leave, and delivered at the Microscopic Society a discourse "On Preventive Vaccination," published in the Lancet and Medical Journal of June and July 1899, which will appear also in the Proceedings of the Society. This address, he says, "places preventive inoculation on a higher plane than it has hitherto occupied." What Jenner was to smallpox, Pasteur to anthrax, that M. Haffkine has been to plague and cholera. In addition to the publications above mentioned, Haffkine contributed to the Journal of the Norwegian Ministry of Public Instruction, in Christiania, in 1889, a paper under the title "Les nouvelles Ecoles publiques en Russie"; to the Journal of Education, in Odessa, 1889, a series of articles "On the Primary Schools of Scandinavia" (in Russian), and translated from Norwegian, together with B. Minoff, Schuebeler's "Horticultural" published in St. Petersburg in 1890 (in Russian). M. Haffkine was elected a member of the Society of Naturalists of Russia, Odessa, in 1885; Member of the Académie de Zoologie de France, Paris, in 1890; and Hon. Member of the Calcutta

Microscopic Society in 1894. In 1897, on the occasion of her Majesty's Jubilee, he received the order of C.I.E., but his exhaustive and magnificent labours have, we understand, been almost honorary.

HARTLEY, Sir Charles Augustus, K.C.M.G., F.R.S.E., was born at Heworth, co. Durham, in 1825, being the son of W. A. Hartley, Esq., iron merchant, of Darlington, by Lillias, daughter of A. Tod, Esq., J.P., of Borrowstounness, N.B. In 1845, after a practical course of instruction in mining and railway engineering at Bishop Auckland and Leeds, he was appointed one of Messrs. Stevenson, Brassey & Mackenzie's district engineers on the Scottish Central Railway, and held that post till 1848, when he was nominated Resident Engineer at Sutton Harbour, Plymouth, under Mr. J. Locke, M.P. In June 1855, on the completion of the Sutton Harbour works, he accepted a commission as Captain in the Turkish Contingent Engineers, and served at Kertch with that force until the end of the Crimean War, for which he received the Turkish war medal. In December 1856 he was elected Engineer-in-Chief to the European Commission of the Danube, on the recommendation of Major (now Lieut.-General Sir John) Stokes, K.C.B., and General Sir John Burgoyne, Bart. In March 1861 he inspected the early works of the Suez Canal, and reported favourably on that scheme to the English Government. In September 1862 he received the honour of knighthood. In 1867 he was awarded the Emperor of Russia's "Grand Competition Prize" of 8000 silver roubles, for which there were twenty competitors, for his plans for enlarging the harbour of Odessa. In 1872, when the depth at Sulina had been increased, by natural scour only, to 20½ feet, and many important river improvements had been effected, he ceased to reside at Sulina, and became Consulting Engineer to the Danube Commission, a post which he still retains. During his residence abroad he was also employed by the Austrian Government to report on various schemes for improving the port of Trieste; by the Turkish Government, to report on dock accommodation at Constantinople; by the Russian Government, to survey and report on the mouths of the Don; by the British Government, to report on an international question of engineering connected with the Scheldt; by the Indian Government, to report on the Hooghly; by the Khedive, to report on the "barrage" across the Nile; and by the Roumanian Government, to prepare surveys and drawings for a harbour on the coast of Bessarabia. In January 1874 he was the first engineer to recommend the improvement of the South Pass and Mouth of the Mississippi in preference to either of the other mouths. In August 1875 he visited the South Pass as a member of Mr. J. B. Eads' Advisory Board and remained in constant communication with that distinguished engineer till the summer of 1879, when Mr. Eads' well-planned operations to deepen the South Pass and Mouth, by means of parallel berths, as at Salina, were crowned with complete success. In 1875-77 he acted as Consulting Engineer to the Cattewater Commissioners for the Cattewater Breakwater at Plymouth. In May 1879 he was appointed a member of the Panama Congress, but abstained from voting in favor of M. de Lessers' Panama-Colon project, as he considered that the engineering data collected up to that time were insufficient to determine satisfactorily the best route for a ship canal across the isthmus. In 1881 he prepared detailed surveys, plans, and estimates for the enlargement of the harbor of Kustendje, in Roumania, and in 1882 for the construction of a commercial harbor at Burgas, in Bulgaria. In 1884 he was created a Knight Commander of St. Michael and George. In 1884-85, on the recommendation of H.M. Government, he acted as one of the English members of the International Technical Commission appointed by the Suez Canal Company to report on the best means of improving the Suez Canal. He is the author of papers on the "Delta of the Danube," on "Public Works in the United States and Canada," and on "Inland Navigations in Europe." He has been decorated with the Orders of the Medjidieh and the Star of Roumania, and has received the Stephenson prize, the Telford medal, the Watt medal, the Telford premium, and the Manby premium from the Institution of C.E. Address: 26 Pall Mall, S.W.

HENRICI, Olaus, F.M.E., Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born March 9, 1840, at Meldorf, in Holstein, and received his early education in the gymnasium of his native town. In 1858 he left Meldorf in order to study for some years in the workshops of a mechanical engineer. In 1859 he proceeded to the Polytechnic School in Karlsruhe, where he remained until 1862, when he entered the University of Heidelberg. Here, in 1863, he graduated with special honours as Ph.D. Dr. Henrici next proceeded to Berlin in order there to prosecute his mathematical studies. In 1865 he became Tutor in the University of Kiel, but left soon afterwards for London. In 1869 Dr. Henrici was appointed Professor of Pure Mathematics in University College, London; and, in 1884, Professor of Mechanics and Mathematics

n in a State resting on a voluntary, impulsive, basis. He constantly expresses his views in his paper, The Free Press, and is an occasional correspondent of the Times. He has published many tracts in support of Voluntaryism, and written a volume of poems. He married Florence, daughter of the 6th Duke of Devonshire. She died in 1886. Address: 11 House, Ringwood, Hants.

L. Frank Harrison, born at Lincolnshire, Feb. 6, 1830, was educated at Manchester New College, and received B.A. in the London University, and was afterwards called to the bar at the Society of Lincoln's Inn. He acted as one of the secretaries of the London Union Committee of the Social Reform Association, to the printed volumes of whose reports he furnished, among other contributions, a paper on "Trade Unions in Sheffield." In the same year he went to Ireland as editor of the Irish Whig. This post he held until the beginning of the year 1866, when he became one of the assistant-editors and principal writers of the Daily News, of which journal he was, from 1870 to 1886, the chief. He is the author of "Political Portraits," 1873, consisting of sketches of English statesmen, which appeared originally in the Daily News, a "Life of George Washington" in the English Worthies, a series of papers in the Fortnightly Review entitled "The Political Adventures of Beaconsfield," since collected and issued as a volume in the United States; an essay on Ireland, published in the Irish Whig; of "Questions for a Reformed Government," 1867. Mr. Hill is the author of a great number of articles on literary and political subjects in the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary, Universal, Fortnightly, National, and Saturday Reviews, the Standard, and other periodicals. Address: 11th Terrace, Victoria Street, S.W.

HOHENLOHE-SCHILLINGSFURST, Clodwig Carl Victor, Prince of Hohenlohe, born at Rothenburg, March 31, 1819, second son of Francis Joseph, Prince of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst (of the line of the Palatinate of the Rhine). On the death of his father, Clodwig had just begun his judicial and historical studies in the University of Göttingen. A year later, after having passed his examination with distinction, he took a subordinate position in the service as Auscultator in the Office of the Prince at Ehrenbreitstein. He next became Referendary of the Government at Bonn. While working thus diligently in this post in Prussia, the Landgrave of Hesse-Rheinfels-Rothenburg died, and the princely family of Hohenlohe succeeded to a rich inheritance, including the lordships of Ratibor and Corvey. The event, however, did not alter Clodwig's position. His elder brother took the domains of Ratibor and Corvey, to which the King of Prussia, William IV., added the title of Duke. In 1845, on the death of his brother, Philip Ernest, Clodwig succeeded, with the consent of his elder brother, to the old family seat of Schillingsfurst, and forsaking the Prussian service, took up his permanent residence in Bavaria. Thus at twenty-seven years of age he became a hereditary member of the Bavarian Parliament. The ministry, meanwhile, in Frankfurt sent him as Ambassador to Athens, Florence, and Rome. In 1849 he returned to Frankfurt. Having married the Princess of Sayn-Wittgenstein, by whom he has a numerous family, he retired for some ten years into private life, paying frequent visits to England, France, and Italy. In 1860 the prince again entered upon parliamentary life, and favoured throughout an alliance with Prussia. Towards the end of 1866 the youthful king requested Hohenlohe to prepare and lay before him a programme of the principles which were to serve eventually as a ministerial policy. Prince Hohenlohe fulfilled his commission to the satisfaction of the king, and on Jan. 1, 1867, succeeded Pfordten as Bavarian Minister. The whole of Germany at last adopted the Hohenlohe programme. In 1868 and 1869 Prince Hohenlohe was elected Vice-President of the Customs Parliament of the German Federation. In his capacity as Foreign Minister of Bavaria he issued his famous circular of April 9, 1869, directing the attention of the European cabinets to the serious consequences likely to arise from the decrees of the Ecumenical Council of the Vatican. Hoping to get the Pope to withdraw his political opposition, and viewing mere religious innovations with extreme indifference, the Prussian Government slighted the warnings of the Bavarian minister, and refused to take action against the contemplated decrees. In consequence of this desertion by the principal exponent of the Unity party, Prince Hohenlohe could not hold out against the attacks of the combined Particularists, Catholics, and Austriacanti in the Bavarian Parliament, and had to resign, March 7, 1870. He then resumed his seat in the Munich House of Peers; and in a few months, on France threatening war, made himself conspicuous by insisting upon the participation of Bavaria in the great national feud. Upon the successful termination of the war in 1871 he was elected member of the first German Parliament, and in recognition of his patriotism immediately became Vice-President thereof. In May 1874, after the deplorable exit of Count Harry Arnim, Prince Hohenlohe was chosen German Ambassador in Paris. He was one of the German Plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. In August of that year he was re-elected to the Reichstag on the second ballot, at Forchheim, Kulmbach, Bavaria, polling 9800 votes, while his Catholic competitor had 8600. After the death of Marshal Manteuffel, Prince Hohenlohe was appointed Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, a position which he held till October 1894. During his administration he enforced the strictest passport regulations at the French frontier, until in September 1891 the emperor issued a rescript rendering it somewhat less difficult for Frenchmen to visit Alsace-Lorraine. In October 1894 he was appointed Chancellor of the German Empire and Prussian Prime Minister in succession to Count von Caprivi and Count von Eulenberg.

HOHENZOLLERN, Hereditary Prince of, H.R.H. Leopold-Etienne-Charles-Antoine-Gustave-Edouard-Thassilo, Prince of Hohenzollern, Burgrave of Nuremberg, Count of Sigmaringen and Veringen, Count of Berg and Seigneur of Haigerloch, &c., is the eldest son of the late Prince Charles Antoine of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and was born Sept. 22, 1835, and studied in the Universities of Bonn and Berlin. His Royal Highness succeeded his father on June 2, 1885; is a hereditary member of the Chamber of Seigneurs of Prussia; General of Prussian infantry in the suite of the first regiment of Foot Guards; chief of the "Prince Charles Antoine de Hohenzollern" regiment of Fusiliers; and Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle, &c., and is well known in connection with his candidature for the throne of Spain, which ultimately gave rise to the Franco-German war. On Sept. 12, 1861, the Prince married, at Lisbon, the Princess Antonia of Portugal, Duchesse de Saxe, born Feb. 17, 1845, by whom he has three sons, of whom the second, Prince Ferdinand, is heir to the Roumanian throne, and husband of Princess Mary of Edinburgh.

HOLMES, Emra, F.R.Hist.S., F.R.S. Ant. Ireland, C.W.R., is a member of the Civil Service, and an enthusiastic Freemason. He was born in 1839, and is the son of Marcus Holmes, a well-known Bristol artist, a descendant of Admiral Sir Robert Holmes, Governor of the Isle of Wight temp. Charles II. His mother, Elizabeth Emra, daughter of the Rev. John Emra, a native of St. Kitts (the family being, it is supposed, of Spanish descent), and Elizabeth was the authoress of "Parish," and other works. He was educated at Christ the Grammar School, Somerset. He left the school in 1854, and three years later to a clerkship in the post office. He became a member of the Freemasons subsequently at Weymouth, and at Barnstaple, Kirkcaldy, Limerick, Newhaven, and New York. JOINVILLE, Prince Ferdinand - Philippe d'Orleans, son of the king of the French, was born Aug. 14, 1818. Soon after his accession to the throne his naval studies, was at the age of thirteen, received the Dukes of Orleans, Aumale, a liberal education at the colleges of France, and examination at Brest. He devoted himself to the profession, and became a general in the French navy. The end of the service was not so his ardent desire to di with the Mediterranean squadron, he disembarked and rode up to the citadelle, in the hope of taking part in the storming of that stronghold, but it was just too late. Not long afterwards he received the command of the corvette Albatros, and joining the fleet of Admiral Bugeaud, was entrusted with the difficult task of obtaining reparation from the Mexican Government. The Créole took a prominent part in the bombardment of San Juan d'Ulloa, and at Vera Cruz he was at the head of the storming party, the first to enter the gates, under a heavy fire, and was only saved from certain death by the devotion of one of his officers. He was selected by the king to command the La Belle Poule frigate, charged with the service of conveying to France the remains of the Emperor Napoleon, and arrived, at Rio Janeiro, May 1, 1843. Francisca de Braganza, sister of Pedro II., Emperor of Brazil. Becoming Rear-Admiral, he took part in the operations of the Admiralty; and the French were deeply indebted to him for the success in which he helped to solve the question of the adaptation of steam engines to vessels of war in 1845. When war broke out between France and Morocco he commanded a squadron, with which he captured Tangiers and took Mogador. On his decisive expedition he was raised to the rank of Vice-Admiral. Being almost constantly on active service, the Prince de Joinville was in Algiers with his brother the Duc d'Aumale when the Revolution of February 1848 overthrew the constitutional monarchy. Resolving to share the misfortune of their family, the two brothers sought refuge in England, and were received by King Louis Philippe at Claremont. The Prince distinguished himself by his aid in the rescue of many of the passengers and crew of the ship Oceanic, when burning off Ormes Head, April 4, 1848. Driven suddenly from a position of power into the narrow limits of private life, he accepted his new situation with simplicity and dignity, and remaining still a French sailor, endeavoured to make himself useful to the navy of his country by his pen, if not by his sword. He had already in 1844 begun publishing in the Revue des Deux Mondes his studies on the French navy. One of his articles, published in 1865, was a comparative study of the fleets of the United States and France, and excited much attention at the time. Happening to be in the United States about a twelvemonth after coming out of the Civil War, he acquainted his nephews, the Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, to the fact that General McClellan, with whose operations he witnessed the principal actions of the Virginian campaign of 1862, and gave an account of the events in a well-written and impartial article published in the Revue des Deux Mondes in 1863. After the downfall of the Napoleonic dynasty he went back to France with the other Orleanist princes, the Law of Exile having been abrogated. He and the Duc d'Aumale took their seats in the National Assembly towards the close of 1871, after their election had been declared valid. In 1873 he assisted at the downfall of M. Thiers, but did not vote the constitution, and in 1876 begged the electors of the Haute-Marne not to re-elect him. He retired into private life, but remained on the books of the navy till the members of former reigning houses in France were expelled from all public employments in 1886. His eldest son, the Duc de Penthièvre, at that time a naval lieutenant, suffered death at the same time. The Prince de Joinville has written on naval topics, and has published a work on England and self-government. His seat is the Château d'Arc-en-Barrois, France.

JOPLING, Louise (Mrs. Rowe), was born on Nov. 16, 1843, and is the fifth child of T. S. Goode. She studied painting for eighteen months in Paris in the studio of the late Mr. Charles Chaplain, and has been the first to bring the Paris atelier system to England. Her painting class is very large, and she instructs it personally, working rapidly from the model in the presence of her pupils, who thus may be said to study their art as do Parisian art students. She has exhibited constantly at the Academy and Grosvenor, and in the new and old Paris Salons. During recent years she has been represented at the Royal Academy's exhibitions by her portrait of Mr. Alfred Lys Baldry, 1895; by "Blue and White" and portraits, 1896; by portrait of Viscountess Maitland, 1897; and by "The Spirit of the Woods" and "At the Gaiety," 1898. She is married to Mr. Rowe, a lawyer, but Jopling is the name of a previous husband. Address: 3 Pembroke Road, Kensington, &c.

KELLY-KENNY, Major-General Thomas, C.B., was born in February 1840. He entered the Army in 1858 as Ensign of the 2nd Foot, the Royal West Surrey Regiment. He was promoted Captain in July 1866, Major in September 1877, and Lieut.-Colonel in July 1881. He has served as an A.D.C. to the Commander-in-Chief at the Cape, and also as Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General in Bombay. He has seen active service both in China and Abyssinia. In 1887 he was appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General in Scotland, and has held the same appointment at Headquarters and at Aldershot, where he was also Major-General on the staff. General Kelly-Kenny has passed the Staff College, and in July 1897 was appointed Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces and Recruiting at Headquarters.

KUHNE, Willy K., F.R.S., LL.D. Camb., Professor of Physiology at the University of Heidelberg, was born at Hamburg on March 28, 1837. He pursued his studies at Göttingen, Jena, Berlin, Paris, and Vienna, under such masters as Virchow, Claude Bernard, and Du Bois-Reymond, and in 1856 obtained his Doctorate of Philosophy. In 1862 he became Dr. Med. Hon., and in 1861 was appointed chemical assistant in the Pathological Institute at Berlin. In 1868 he became Professor of Physiology at Amsterdam, and in 1871 Professor of Physiology at Heidelberg, and Director of the Physiological Institute there. His directorship has been a long and illustrious one, his labours and discoveries at the Institute having long since placed him in the front rank of European physiologists. He was elected a foreign member of the Royal Society in 1892, and in August 1898, on the occasion of the meeting of the Zoological Congress at Cambridge, was one of the distinguished foreign recipients of the hon. LL.D. degree. He has contributed many weighty papers to the learned journals, such as Müller's and Virchow's Archives, on nerves, &c., and has published "Myologische Untersuchungen," 1860; "Ueber die peripherischen Endorgane der motorischen Nerven," 1862; "Untersuchungen über das Protoplasma und die Contractilität," 1864; and "Lehrbuch der physiologischen Chemie," 1866-68. Address: Heidelberg.

LEGROS, Alphonse, painter and etcher, was born at Dijon on May 8, 1837, of poor parents, who put him apprentice to a house-painter. He subsequently studied art under Cambon in Paris, entered the École des Beaux-Arts, and first made his mark by pictures exhibited at the Salon between 1859 and 1863. Coming to London in the last-named year he was cordially received by Rossetti, G. F. Watts, and their circle, and in 1876 was appointed Slade Professor of Fine Arts in University College, London. He taught there for seventeen years, painting from the model in the presence of his pupils. His pictures are the country scenes and landscapes of France, painted with an simplicity which have rendered him an artist for artists, rather than for the public. Among his principal works to be mentioned: "Portrait of a Man" (Salon, 1857); "The Atonement" ("Ex Voto," 1861; "Massacre of the Innocents," 1863; "Stoning of St. Stephen," exhibited at the Royal Academy and at the Salon in 1864; "The Atonement," awarded the gold medal of the "Honorables," which gained him the Salon; "Pilgrimage," "The Dead Christ," &c. "The Atonement" is in the Luxembourg. Many other pictures are in museums and galleries in France and England. "The Atonement," for instance, is in the National Gallery. He is one of the men who revived the art of etching, and is a master. He is a naturalist, and married a daughter of Mr. Hodgson, of Kendal, in 1861. 57 Brook Green, W.

MONCREIFF, Lord Moncreiff, is the eldest son of Lord Moncreiff of Tullibole. He was born in Edinburgh on May 1, 1811. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh, and subsequently at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1861, he graduated B.A. with Law honours). He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1863; he was Advocate-Depute 1865-66, 1874 and 1880-81. In 1877 he was appointed Sheriff of the counties of Argyll and Bute, which office he held until 1888, when he was appointed a Judge of the College of Justice (the Court of Session). He is a Liberal Unionist. He is the author of a work "The Criminal Cases," 1877. On April 3, 1866, Susan V. Moncreiff, daughter of Sir William Moncreiff, Bart., of Preston (died 1869); and secondly, on May 1, 1869, Millicent Julia, daughter of Mr. Fryer, of Moulton Paddock. She died in 1881. NAQUET, Joseph A. born at Carpentras (Vaucluse) in 1834, and educated first at Montpellier, and finally in Paris, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1859. He then went into the chemical laboratory of the School of Medicine in Paris under M. Wurtz, and wrote many papers on pure chemistry. In 1863 he became Professor of Physics at Palermo, and while there wrote his work "Principes de chimie fondée sur les Théories," which has passed through five editions in France, and been translated into English, German, and Polish. In 1870 M. Naquet entered political life, and was accused against him of conspiracy against the Empire having resulted in fifteen months' imprisonment and a subsequent exile into Spain, from which he returned in 1879; and having taken a prominent part in the events of Sept. 4, 1870, he was elected, at Tours, nominated by the Government, as Secretary to the Defence Commission. He was, in 1879, elected Deputy for Vaucluse, and at first supported Gambetta, but eventually broke with him. He then threw all his strength into the effort for legalising divorce, in which he succeeded in 1886. As he was a strong revisionist, and thought that that end might be attained through the success of General Boulanger, he became one of his warmest supporters; that end having failed, he now remains a member of the isolated Boulangist group, who are still in opposition to the Government. He is author of some political and scientific works. His book on "Divorce," 1877, and a translation of Liebig's "Calculus of Chemical Operations," may be cited.

NETHERSOLE, Olga, actress, was born in London on Jan. 18, 1870, and is the youngest daughter of the late Henry Nethersole. She was educated privately, and at the age of sixteen, having from her earliest years determined on a dramatic career, was presented with an opportunity of going on the stage, but did not actually appear for another two years, when she played in public for the first time. The play was Mr. Hamilton's "Harvest," which was being presented at the Brighton Theatre. She made her London debut at the Adelphi in "The Union Jack," and met with great success. Afterwards she appeared in the title-rôle of "The Dean's Daughter," brought out by Mr. Rutland Barrington at the St. James's, and then as the intriguing woman in "The Silver Falls." As the stage wicked woman she was even then thought to have found her own especial province. Mr. Hare invited her to the newly-built Garrick Theatre, where she made her mark in "The Profligate" as the betrayed Janet Preece. For some time after the run of this play she understudied Mrs. Bernard Beere, and at last finding that her talents were not given proper scope in England, determined by the advice of friends to visit Australia. She played in Mr. Haddon Chambers's "Idler" in the New Garrick Theatre, Sydney, six weeks before the play was given in London. After a triumphant ten months' tour in Australia she returned home, and was re-engaged by Mr. John Hare, appearing as Beatrice Selwyn in "The Fool's Paradise," and at the Criterion in "Agatha," where she made a lasting impression. In 1893, when the Bancrofts returned to the stage, she won her grand success in the revival of "Diplomacy," where she took the part of the Countess Zica, formerly played with great art by Lady Bancroft, and by Miss Nethersole spiritedly elaborated. In 1894 Miss Nethersole became lessee and manager of the Court Theatre, and in the autumn of 1898, as manager of Her Majesty's, she produced and took the title-rôle in Messrs. Parker and Carson's "Termagant." She has four times starred in the States at the head of her own company. Address: 5 Norfolk Street, Park Lane, W.

PARRATT, Sir Walter, Mus. Doc., was born on Feb. 10, 1841, at Huddersfield, and is the son of Thomas Parratt of that town. He was educated at home and at the Collegiate School, Huddersfield. After holding various church organistships, he was appointed to Magdalen College, Oxford, where he made his mark as a musician and teacher, and continued rising in public favour until appointed organist to St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor. As Court Organist he has conducted the music at most of the Royal funerals at the Castle. He is Private Organist to the Queen, Master of the Queen's Music, and has presided at the concerts given at the Albert Institute by the Windsor and Eton Madrigal and Orchestral Societies. He is also Past Grand Organist of the Freemasons, Professor at the Royal College of Music, and Examiner in Music at Oxford, Cambridge, and London Universities. He wrote much of the music for the "Tale of Troy" in 1883 (see WARR), and has written on this subject in Grove's "Dictionary," &c. Addresses: The Cloisters, Windsor; and Athenæum.

Reid, Sir Hugh Gilzean, Hon.
Aberd.), J.P., D.L., Fellow of the Institute of Journalists, was born in Aberdeenshire on Aug. 11, 1838, and educated at various schools, afterwards attending classes at Aberdeen and Edinburgh Universities. Intended originally for the ministry, he became a journalist at the age of eighteen, and was editor of papers at Peterhead and in Edinburgh. He has been among the founders or early promoters of newspapers in Aberdeenshire, Lancashire, Yorkshire, in which county the North-Eastern Daily Gazette is closely connected with his name, the Midlands, and London, where the Echo was first founded by him.

The Institute of Journalists owes its origin to him. Established on March 9, 1889, by conversion of the National Association of Journalists, founded by provincial pressmen in 1884, it was incorporated by Royal Charter in March 1890. The objects of the Institute were embodied in thirteen clauses, which provide, among other things, for the holding of examinations in order to test the knowledge and ability of candidates for the journalistic calling. For this laudable and important attempt to raise journalism to the dignity of one of the learned professions the subject of our memoir was knighted by the Queen in 1893. He presided over the first annual conference of the Incorporated Institute at Birmingham in 1890, on which occasion he was presented by Sir Algernon Borthwick, his successor-elect in the Presidency, with his portrait in oils on behalf of the members of the Institute and in recognition of his great services in the cause of journalism during the last three years. In 1894 Sir Hugh Gilzean Reid was instrumental in promoting the International Press Congress. He has represented Aston Manor in the House of Commons, being first Liberal member for that constituency, was President of the Newspaper Society in 1898-99, and has been a pioneer in the movement for providing the working men of Edinburgh with model dwellings. His long residence in Belgium at one time rendered him familiar with the Congo Free State scheme, which he did much to promote and popularise. In 1897 he was created Officier of the Order of Leopold, and in May 1899 Knight Commander of the Order of the Crown, "as a recognition of voluntary and valuable help to the civilising agencies" in the Congo Free State. He has published, among other works, "Lowland Legends,"
"Social and Religious Life in Scotland," "Housing the People," "Talks with Men of Mark," &c. Lady Gil-zean Reid, who died in 1895, was an authoress, and ardent worker in the cause of her sex. Address: Dollis Hill,
